POP ACCOUNTANCY?

We have the modern approach

We believe that professional firms must keep abreast of the latest trends and techniques if they are to provide an adequate and up-to-date service to clients in the 1970s.

Our management services division and our audit division are equipping themselves to face this technological explosion.

Alongside this, our trustee and investment advisory departments are streamlining their work to provide services more in keeping with the computer age in which we live.

These services can only be provided with adequate manpower and we are recruiting through our audit division a team of energetic young chartered accountants who are prepared to accept the challenge and to make their contribution to the economic progress of this country.

Are you interested?

We pay progressive salaries. Salaries depend on progress. Progress should be rapid.

If you are qualified or a November finalist and between 23 and 28 apply as soon as possible to Box PA7269.

Saving in perspective

On any view, freedom from fluctuations is of prime importance to the personal saver. An Abbey National shareholding offers this—and much besides. Shares that hold their price, the certainty of a reasonable return (made even more attractive because Abbey National pay the income tax) and withdrawal facilities that are the nearest thing possible to complete liquidity—these features combine stability, yield and flexibility in a way that meets the needs of many. As an accumulating account for the prudent saver, an income-booster for the small investor, or a stabilising factor in larger portfolios, Abbey National is equally advisable—and equally to be advised. What's all this whispering in the boardroom?

Haven't you heard? They're talking about Burroughs computers.

I know they make a full range of adding and accounting machines—good ones, too—but...

That's the point. Burroughs have built up a tremendous reputation for the quality—the speed, accuracy and reliability—of their machines and their service.

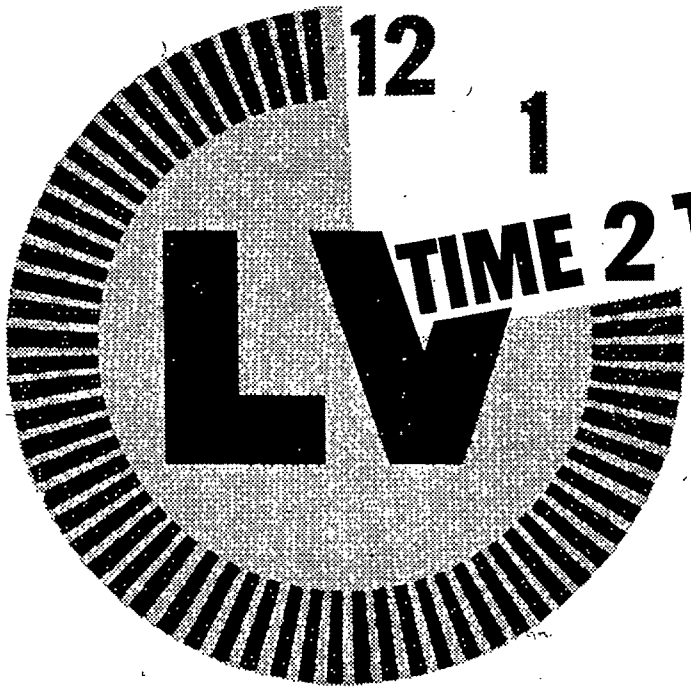
Today Burroughs export over 65% of their U.K. production....

And building computers is a natural extension of all this?

That's right. Burroughs were in a unique position to enter the computer field. They had the resources of over 2,000 of the world's finest scientists, engineers and mathematicians behind them.

This isn't a new development then?

Far from it! Burroughs have installed over 1,500 computers throughout the world! Everything from banking to space exploration....



But what about this country?

Well, based on their experience, and the reputation of all their other products, Burroughs are selling a lot of computers here, too. Their highly skilled consultants, technicians and support personnel are making a positive contribution to modernizing Britain.

Computers for British business are in good hands!

Reasonable Men

IN 1948, the Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales took legal advice on the responsibilities of auditors of holding companies when reporting on group accounts under the provisions of the new Companies Act of that year. The Council has recently had the views then expressed by Counsel reaffirmed and has now issued a statement (reproduced elsewhere in this issue) giving in some detail its own interpretation of the position. This document will be regarded by members of the profession as a sincere attempt to clarify, if not to resolve, the clouded issues of the unhappy Seager Evans affair of last December.

The Council accepts the dictum of the original Counsel (quoted in its statement) that the auditors of holding companies must take responsibility for accepting the financial statements of subsidiaries incorporated in group accounts and that, if they feel that they cannot rely on the reports of other auditors, they should make what inquiries they think necessary. It is for the holding company's auditors to make up their minds which course, as 'reasonable men', they should pursue. The protocol suggested by the Council in instances where further information is required is briefly as follows. The auditors of the holding company should first of all turn to the directors of the holding company who are responsible for the group accounts. If the directors do not know or cannot obtain the answers, then they should authorize the auditors of the holding company to confer with the auditors of the subsidiaries concerned. The Council is at pains to make it clear that while this liaison calls for professional tact and understanding by both parties, the overriding consideration is that the holding company's auditors must be satisfied.

However, two questions highlighted by the Seager Evans affair remain unresolved. Will company directors be more minded to observe this prescriptive statement by the Council now that it has been underlined, as it were? Secondly, if one firm of auditors resigns because it feels that it cannot comply with its statutory obligations under existing conditions and another firm of auditors accepts the appointment on the same terms, then – assuming equal competence by both – there must be a fundamental difference of opinion between the two firms on the degree of scope needed to carry out the assignment satisfactorily. For the sake of the future strength and unity of the profession, should not some definitive standard acceptable to all 'reasonable men' be established immediately?

Hire-purchase Accounting Principles

THE Edwardian aristocrat who never paid for his last Savile Row suit until he had ordered his next one thought that he was just taking advantage of the extended credit being arranged to him by an indulgent tailor, honoured by his custom. Usually concealed in the inflated price of each suit, however, was a quite substantial notional financing charge.

With the gentle spread of wealth, more and more people entertaining similar delusions of grandeur came to expect credit and so, in time, what was originally a rough and ready method of adding compensatory interest to the cash price of the goods being sold became rationalized in the social and scientific phenomenon of hire-purchase. For better or worse, the practice has now become an accepted part of our commercial structure and much has been written about its various aspects, ethical, economic and financial.

Two of the best books so far are Hire-purchase in a Free Society[1], by RALPH HARRIS, ARTHUR SELDON and MARGOT NAYLOR, which deals with the history, practice, financing and law of the subject; and Hire-purchase Accounts and Finance[2], by H. SIMPSON COOK, J. ANDERSON HERMON and H. PEARSE, which, from the accountant's viewpoint, is an indispensable work.

Elsewhere in this issue, we reproduce another well-considered contribution to the literature of the subject in the shape of the latest recommendation on accounting principles issued by the Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales. This deals with points to be observed in the financial accounts of businesses granting credit facilities for or by way of hire-purchase, credit sales and rental transactions.

The cardinal principles behind all hire-purchase accounting are that the true income and expenditure for each period should be as closely related as possible, that credit for profit should never be taken until it is realized and, particularly, that the final realized profit on any transaction should only be arrived at after all claims for maintenance and other expenses have been provided for. If these points are not observed then, as the Council in effect states, income or expenses unduly anticipated or deferred would, in cases where the transactions affected the accounts of more than one financial year, give rise to distortions of profit inconsistent with the presentation of a true and fair view. Accordingly, the recommendations made are designed to ensure equity both in the interim and final reckonings of each contract.

The Council's statement is divided into two parts, the first of which deals with the operations of hire-purchase finance companies. These comprise mainly the financing of sales on hire-purchase terms (i.e., buying goods from dealers and hiring goods to customers with, usually, an option to purchase) and the purchase from dealers or from other finance companies of contractual rights under instalment credit agreements with third parties. The second part of the statement concerns dealers who may either finance their own transactions with customers or assign their contracts, as instanced above.

In both kinds of business, the main problem is how to apportion income fairly to the relevant accounting periods. The Council enumerates and explains the various methods in use and recommends that the particular techniques adopted should be both appropriate to the type of transaction and should be applied consistently. A further important warning is added that the amount of any income carried forward from one financial period to another should be sufficient to cover all rebates and allowances which would become payable if all agreements were settled immediately after any balance sheet date.

Among the other matters to which the Council gives careful consideration is the assessment of the necessary provision for bad debts, and it is interesting to note that an assessment by scrutiny of individual accounts is preferred to a percentage calculation based on sampling and past experience. In practice, commercial managers of hire-purchase concerns tend to have an uncanny knowledge of the financial standing of their customers and their estimates are almost invariably thoroughly reliable.

On Improving Local Government

IT is fitting that The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants should submit evidence (reproduced in this issue) to the Maud (Management) and Mallaby (Staffing) Committees since such a chartered body is eminently qualified to express a well-informed opinion on the subjects under review; this is particularly so because of the specialization inherent in the development of the Institute and the training of its members over the last eighty years – a development alongside the growing complexities of local government.

Local government in Great Britain is 'big business', and despite the loss of electricity and gas undertakings to the nationalized boards and of hundreds of hospitals to the National Health Service, the residue of the annual revenue left with local authorities is well over £2,000 million with, in addition, capital expenditure approaching £1,000 million a year. Perhaps because the sum of the activities of local government is provided by some 1,500 authorities, the public image of local government tends to become unimportant and is the subject of indifference, and complaint.

It is questionable, too, whether the average council member individually appreciates the importance of providing and financing proper training facilities, coupled with inducements to join the service. After all, the local ratepayers contribute huge sums of money for education so it is not unreasonable that they should receive some direct benefit through the recruitment to local government of some of the best fruits of modern educational policies.

So, with little information on local government given in schools or in adult education activities, it is small wonder that from lack of knowledge the public evince no general interest, except perhaps at local elections when, as a result of canvassing and cajoling, a small percentage actually vote. The fact is that local government is extremely important business which should attract high-calibre executives and policy makers.

The Institute draws attention to the differences between private organizations and local authorities – particularly those arising from democratic processes inherent in local government – and makes suggestions for improving local authority machinery. On the subject of management generally and of the local authority treasurer in particular, the Institute's recommendations should commend themselves to all concerned.

It is noteworthy that the IMTA has recently initiated an independent research into training for the profession, in association with the University of Lancaster, which is expected to be completed in a few months. In its evidence the Institute explains that training for the profession combines practical work 'on the job' with theoretical training through correspondence courses, supplemented by oral tuition. Students' societies (now comprising nearly nine thousand members) organized on a voluntary basis by members of the Institute and mainly at their own expense, play a major part in the training of potential local government officers.

The IMTA's views on recruitment and training of staff are based on propositions leading to the conclusion that local authorities and their corporate associations should assume a much greater role than they have in the past, and that machinery be evolved to achieve a better balance in training arrangements in order to remove current frustration which tends to reflect on the image of local government. There is undoubtedly much point in this, for local authorities themselves are largely to blame for the present state of affairs. The associations of local authorities have lagged behind industrial and other large-scale organizations in taking worth-while initiatives in matters of training and recruitment. It is true that day-release courses at technical colleges have been introduced in recent years – mainly by the energy and drive of senior officers themselves – and many of the younger staff members in the more enlightened offices are benefiting from them, but there is plenty of lee-way to make up.

It is to be hoped, therefore, that with the benefit of such sensible and thought-provoking evidence as that presented by the IMTA, the two committees' eventual reports will produce cogent recommendations which, promptly implemented, will do much to give local government the 'new look' it so patently requires.

Ex Gratia Payments

by K. BUCKLEY EDWARDS

LITIGATION or threatened litigation is frequently compromised on the terms that one party will make to the other a payment described in express terms as 'ex gratia' or 'without admission of liability', which means the same thing. A settlement so made is generally enforceable at law. The quoted words are simply used to indicate that the party paying does not admit any pre-existing liability or that he wishes to avoid a precedent in subsequent cases. By describing the contemplated payment as 'ex gratia', he is not seeking to preclude the legal enforceability of the settlement itself.

In the world of business, agreements to make ex gratia payments are quite common outside the field of litigation or threatened litigation. An insurance company may make such a payment where it considers itself not legally bound to pay anything, because the assured, or maybe the agent, is a valued associate of long standing whom it does not wish to risk losing, or because the circumstances of the case involve particular hardship to the intended recipient of the payment. Similarly, a good employer may desire to make an ex gratia payment to a long-service employee on his retirement supposing, rightly or wrongly, that because the payment is so described it will not attract tax in the hands of the employee. Sometimes it is supposed that the tag, 'ex gratia', appended to the promise to pay, exonerates the promise when accepted from having legal effect. As will be shown later, this is not necessarily the case.

Intention to Create Legal Relations

Generally speaking, an agreement is made when one party accepts an offer made by the other; but an agreement is not a binding contract unless it is made under seal or for some valuable consideration, however small. Consequently, the law will not enforce a gratuitous promise or a promise made wholly from charitable or sentimental motives, nor will it enforce an agreement 'subject to contract', since the parties are taken to have expressly provided that they shall not be bound until formal contracts giving effect to their agreement have been exchanged.

But this is not the whole of the picture. An agreement which is supported by consideration is only binding as a contract if it was made with the intention of creating legal relations. An agreement may expressly provide, by using clear words, that the intention is to make the transaction binding in honour only, and not in law. A now familiar example of this kind of agreement is contained in the rules of a pools firm, which are binding on the so-called 'investor'. In the absence of such clear words, the law will ordinarily imply that the intention of a business agreement is to create legal relations, and the intention of a social or family agreement not to create legal relations.

A leading case on business agreements is Rose & Frank Co v. J. R. Crompton & Bros Ltd ([1924] All E.R. 245), which was the first reported case to incorporate an express 'honour clause' excluding all legal relations. An agency agreement provided as follows:

> 'This arrangement is not entered into, nor is this memorandum written, as a formal or legal agreement, and shall not be subject to legal jurisdiction in the Law Courts . . . but is only a definite expression and record of the purpose and intention of the . . . parties concerned, to which they each honourably pledge themselves'.

In the Court of Appeal the agreement was held not to be a legally binding contract. Scrutton, L.J., said there was no reason, even in business matters, why the parties should not intend to rely on each other's good faith and honour and to exclude all idea of settling disputes by any outside intervention, with the accompanying necessity of expressing themselves so precisely that outsiders might have no difficulty in understanding what they meant. If such an intention were clearly expressed, there was no reason in public policy why effect should not be given to it.

Contributions to Pension Scheme

The latest case – and a very instructive one at that – is Edwards v. Skyways Ltd ([1964] 1 All E.R. 494). The plaintiff was employed by the defendants as an aircraft pilot with the rank of captain, and as such was a member of the defendants' contributory pension fund. Under the rules of the fund the plaintiff was entitled, on leaving the defendants' service in advance of retirement age (which was 50) to a choice between two options: (i) to withdraw the sum of his own contributions to the fund, or (ii) to take the right to a paid-up pension payable at retirement age.

In January 1962, the defendants wrote to the plaintiff, among others, informing him that it was necessary to declare a redundancy of approximately 15 per cent of the defendants' pilot strength and giving him three months' notice terminating the employment. At the same time the plaintiff was offered alternative employment as a captain with a subsidiary company, which would have involved him in moving his home, or as a first officer with the defendants, which would have involved a reduction of pay and status.

At a meeting in February 1962, between authorized representatives of the defendants and the plaintiff's trade association, it was agreed (according to the notes of the meeting) that 'pilots declared redundant and leaving (the defendants' service) would be given an ex gratia payment equivalent to the defendant company's contributions to the pension fund'. But what the defendants' representative actually said at the meeting was that the defendants would make ex gratia payments approximating to the company's contributions.

Having been informed of the recorded agreement, and having found other employment and left the defendants' service, the plaintiff in May, 1962, elected to withdraw his contributions to the pension fund and to receive the ex gratia payment which the defendants proposed to make. The defendants paid the plaintiff the amount of his own contributions, but not the ex gratia payment, and they rescinded their earlier decision to make such payments on account of financial stringency at the time. The plaintiff then brought an action against the defendants to recover a sum equal to the total contributions made by them in respect of him to the pension fund.

A Useful Judgment

In the High Court, Megaw, J., said the subject-matter of the agreement between the parties was business relations and not social or domestic matters, and there was admittedly consideration for the defendants' promise. In a case of this nature the onus of proof was on the party which asserted that no legal effect was intended, and that onus was a heavy one. The defendants had said, (i) that the use of the phrase 'ex gratia' showed that their promise to pay was to have no binding force in law; (ii) that there was certain background knowledge, present in the minds of everyone, which gave unambiguous significance to 'ex gratia' as excluding legal relationship; and (iii) that even if the agreement were otherwise binding, it was not enforceable because its terms were too vague.

Dealing with these three defences in turn, the judge said that the words 'ex gratia' did not carry a necessary, or even a probable, implication that the agreement was to be without legal effect. The words might have been used to avoid conceding that any such payment as that promised was due under the employee's contract of service or to show – ironically in the event – the defendants' generosity in making a payment beyond what was required by the contract of service. There was nothing in the mere use of the words 'ex gratia' to warrant the conclusion that the promise in question, duly made and accepted for valid consideration, was not intended by the parties to be enforceable in law, unless in the circumstances some very special meaning had to be given to the words.

It was said by the defendants that a special meaning had to be given to the words because, at the meeting in February 1962, it was understood by the defendants and their representatives and by the plaintiff's association and its representatives, that if the defendants' payment were made as the result of a legally binding obligation, it would be taxable in the hands of the recipient; whereas if it were made without legal obligation on the part of the company it would not be taxable. The judge said that this submission failed because the evidence fell far short of showing that this supposed background of avoidance of tax liability was present as an important element in the minds of all, or indeed any, of the persons who attended the meeting. Even if it had been present in some degree, and as one element, in the minds of some of the persons present at the meeting, it would have been far from sufficient to establish that both parties affirmatively intended not to enter into legal relations in respect of the defendants' promise to pay.

The defendants' third contention was based on the words 'approximating to' which, it was said, left a discretion to the defendants so that they could refuse to pay anything. But at most 'approximating to', if those were the words used, would on the evidence connote a rounding-off of a few pounds downwards to a round figure. English law did not provide that in such circumstances the plaintiff would be entitled to nothing. A contract for the sale of goods was valid and binding when it provided for 'about 1,000 tons in seller's option', or '1,000 tons, up to 10 per cent more or less in buyer's option', and on this footing it would be hard to justify treating the contract in question as a nullity.

Domestic Agreements

Social and domestic arrangements do not usually amount to contracts because they are not intended to be legally binding. Consequently, it has been held that the winner of a golf club competition could not sue for his prize because:

> 'no one concerned with that competition ever intended that there should be any legal results flowing from the conditions posted and the acceptance by the competitor of those conditions': Lens v. Devonshire Club (The Times, December 4th, 1914).

The leading case on this type of agreement, however, is Balfour v. Balfour ([1919] 2 K.B. 571) where a husband, before returning to Ceylon at the end of his leave, promised to make his wife an allowance of £30 a month, as she had to remain in England for health reasons. When the husband defaulted, the wife's attempt to enforce his promise by action failed for two reasons: (i) the wife had provided no consideration for the promise, and (ii) the parties did not intend the arrangement to be legally binding. Atkin, L.J., referring to domestic agreements, said:

> 'Those agreements, or many of them, do not result in contracts at all . . . even though there may be what as between other parties would constitute consideration for the agreement. . . . They are not contracts . . . because the parties did not intend that they should be attended by legal consequences. . . . Agreements such as these are outside the realm of contracts altogether.'

Exceptions to Rule

Following this rule, an arrangement under which husband and wife both draw on a joint bank account is not a contract; and a husband who 'gives' his wife a car which he has obtained under hire-purchase agreement does not thereby make an assignment of his rights under the agreement to his wife. But it is perfectly possible for a husband to make a binding contract with his wife (e.g., a husband can be his wife's tenant), and binding separation agreements are often made when husband and wife agree to live apart. Moreover, if a man before marriage holds out a substantial inducement to a woman to marry him, such as a promise to leave her a house, the wife can enforce it after marriage; though it would be difficult for her to enforce a less important promise, say, as to the size of her dress allowance.

There are two oft-quoted cases, decided within the last decade, which provide clear-cut exceptions to the rule that domestic and social agreements are not intended to create legal relations.

The first of these cases is Simpkins v. Pays ([1955] 1 W.L.R. 975) where the plaintiff was a lodger in the defendant's house and was accepted as one of the defendant's family. The plaintiff and defendant, together with the defendant's grand-daughter, were in the habit of entering jointly a fashion competition in a Sunday newspaper, each of the parties making one forecast and the coupon being filled in by the plaintiff and made out in the defendant's name. The parties agreed that any winnings should be shared between them.

A prize of £750 was won, but the defendant refused to pay one-third of the prize money to the plaintiff claiming, inter alia, that there was no intention to create legal relations in this family arrangement. Sellers, J., gave judgment for the plaintiff, saying there was mutuality between the parties, as each had given up her exclusive claim to the whole of any prize money she might win in exchange for a three-fold increase in the chances of sharing in a prize. There was an informal syndicate so that they should all get the benefit of success.

In the second case – Parker v. Clark ([1960] 1 All E.R. 93) – the plaintiffs, who were husband and wife, agreed to give up their own home and go to live with the defendants, who were an elderly couple related to the female plaintiff. It was agreed that the cost of maintaining the joint home should be shared between the parties; that the male defendant should provide certain amenities, such as a daily help, and that he and his wife should leave their house and its contents by will to the female plaintiff, her sister and her daughter. Acting on the agreement the plaintiffs sold their house and lent part of the proceeds to their daughter to buy a flat. The new arrangement worked well for a time, but after about eighteen months the atmosphere became unbearable and the male defendant told the plaintiffs to leave, which they eventually did. They then sued the defendants for breach of contract.

Collective Agreements

Devlin, J., said that both parties had acted on the arrangement, the defendants by leaving their house by will (which was something quite different from the ordinary domestic arrangement considered in Balfour v. Balfour), and the plaintiffs by disposing of their own home, contributing a sum towards the expenses of the joint home and tying up money in the purchase of a flat for their daughter. Both sides had thus shown that they were relying on the agreement being legally enforceable. (Had the agreement been made under seal, which it had not, that itself would have been sufficient indication that the parties intended to create legal relations.)

Agreements as to rates of wages and conditions of work are commonly reached after collective bargaining between a trade union and an employer or association of employers. If the terms of such agreements are incorporated in individual service contracts, they become legally binding on the parties to those contracts. But no attempt has yet been made in England to enforce a collective agreement between the parties who actually negotiated it, on the ground that collective agreements are binding in honour only and are not to be enforced by judicial sanctions. Thus it was said in Spring v. National Amalgamated Stevedores and Dockers Society ([1956] 1 W.L.R. 585) that the 'Bridlington Agreement', which regulates the transfer of members between unions affiliated to the Trades Union Congress, does not lay down 'points of law' but is a 'morally binding code of conduct between persons of similar views'.

On the other hand, it would seem that the efficacy of the rule relating to collective agreements has been somewhat undermined by section 4 of the Contracts of Employment Act, 1963, which lays on employers a statutory duty to inform employees in writing of the main terms of their employment so that, in cases covered by the Act, the terms of a collective agreement may be embodied in individual contracts between employer and employee.

Conclusion

It will be seen from what has been said above that there is no magic in the use of the words 'ex gratia' and that, in the case of business agreements at all events, they are ineffective in themselves to negative an intention to create legal relations, where such an intention appears from the wording of correspondence, the conduct of the parties and the facts of the case generally. Consequently, if a party does not intend to be bound by a business agreement, he should not be persuaded to enter into it on the argument that the words 'ex gratia' will make the payment binding in honour only, since the reverse may prove to be the case. There should be some other good reason for using the words, such as a desire to avoid a precedent for a similar payment in future.

Auditors' Reports on Group Accounts

Statement on Auditing, No. 5

The Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales has taken further legal advice about the duties of auditors in reporting on group accounts under the provisions of the Companies Act, 1948. Counsel have reaffirmed the opinion which was given jointly by the Counsel consulted in 1948 and is reproduced in paragraphs 19–23 of Members' Handbook O2.

The following statement in amplification of those paragraphs of O2 is issued by the Council for the guidance of members and has the approval of Counsel.

1. The Ninth Schedule of the Companies Act, 1948, provides that in the case of a holding company submitting group accounts its auditors shall expressly state whether, in their opinion, the group accounts have been properly prepared in accordance with the provisions of the Act so as to give a true and fair view of the state of affairs or profit or loss of the company and its subsidiaries dealt with thereby, so far as concerns members of the company.

2. This duty presents special problems for the auditors of a holding company when the group accounts contain material amounts relating to subsidiaries which they have not themselves audited. A holding company's auditors are not relieved of responsibility for accepting information from unaudited accounts; equally they are not relieved of responsibility for accepting information from accounts which have been audited by others. It is proper to take account of the nature and extent of any examination carried out by other external auditors just as it is proper to take account of the internal control; but, whether the group accounts are prepared in the form of consolidated accounts or in some other form, the opinion which is expressed on them is the opinion of the auditors of the holding company. While it is usually desirable for the holding company's auditors to include in their report, for the information of the shareholders, some such factual statement (where the amounts involved are material) as:

> The accounts of one (or some) of the subsidiaries have been audited by another firm (or other firms) this does not relieve them of their obligations. The responsibility for the opinion which they express is theirs and theirs alone, and it is their professional competence and reputation on which the shareholders who appointed them are relying. In the words of the opinion given by Counsel in 1948 and reaffirmed by Counsel in 1965:

> The auditors of the holding company must take responsibility for accepting for the purposes of group accounts the balance sheets and profit and loss accounts of subsidiaries. This may involve either relying upon the reports of the auditors of the subsidiaries or making such inquiries regarding the subsidiaries' accounts as they deem to be necessary. It is for the holding company's auditors to decide, as reasonable men, which course it is necessary for them to take for this purpose. (Paragraph 125, Members' Handbook O 2.)

3. Thus, while the context in which auditors report on group accounts embracing subsidiaries of which they are not themselves the duly appointed auditors differs from that in which they report as the duly appointed auditors of a particular company and accordingly gives rise to a difference in the character of their audit inquiries, the auditors of a holding company have a duty to form in that context an opinion of their own on the group accounts; this is a duty which cannot and should not be disclaimed and is not discharged by uninformed acceptance of the accounts of the constituent companies.

4. If the auditors of a holding company are to form their own opinion about amounts in the group accounts relating to subsidiaries not audited by them, they will need to be able to ascertain how these amounts have been arrived at and what assurance there is of their reliability. For this information they should look first to the holding company, whose officers have a statutory duty under section 162 of the Companies Act, 1948, to supply it to them. The accounts of individual subsidiaries are the concern of the directors of such subsidiaries who may often have to consider the interests of minority shareholders or, if the companies are abroad, to comply with local laws. But the presentation of the group accounts is the responsibility of the directors of the holding company. This means that the holding company must have sufficient information, and sufficient assurance, about the amounts derived from the accounts of the subsidiaries to satisfy its board and its auditors that the group accounts give, so far as concerns the holding company's shareholders, a true and fair view.

5. If it is found that the holding company lacks information about any of its subsidiaries which is needed by the holding company's auditors to enable them to form their opinion, the auditors of the holding company should ask for the deficiency to be made good. This can normally be done by direct contact between the companies, but it is both convenient and helpful if the respective auditors are also authorized to confer with one another through arrangements made by the holding company with the directors of the subsidiaries and by the latter with the auditors of their own companies. Such liaison is particularly desirable if the report of the auditors of a subsidiary contains a reservation which may be material in relation to the group accounts. Authorization is necessary because of the professional duty of confidence which each auditing firm has to its own clients, but it is difficult to envisage circumstances in which direct contact between different professional firms of auditors within a group would be other than advantageous to the group or to the individual companies. Refusal of such authorization or lack of collaboration on the part of the subsidiary company's auditors would inevitably put the auditors of the holding company on inquiry.

6. It is necessary in any event that consultation between the respective auditors should be authorized because of another aspect of the matter which can properly be dealt with only by direct contact between them. This concerns the nature and extent of the examination carried out by subsidiaries' auditors in discharge of their own duties. The auditors of a company, having given their professional opinion, would not usually entertain, even from professional colleagues, questions about the manner in which they had reached it and might regard such questions as implying some doubt as to their professional care or competence. Special considerations arise, however, where in a group of companies under common control some of the companies have auditors who are not those of the holding company. In such circumstances the auditors who are reporting on the group accounts should have regard to the auditing which has been done by the other firms, but in doing so they need to bear in mind that the nature and extent of the audit examination carried out is a matter of professional judgment and that no two firms of whatever standing and competence will necessarily exercise their judgment identically. The judgment which has to be exercised in forming an opinion on the group accounts is, however, that of the auditors of the holding company; it follows that the holding company's auditors must consider whether all material aspects of the group accounts have been subjected to an audit examination of which the nature and extent are in their own judgment adequate and resonable for the purpose of forming an opinion on the group accounts.

7. The extent of the inquries which the holding company's auditors find it necessary to make in fulfilment of this obligation will depend on their experience of the other auditors, on the degree of materiality from the group standpoint of the amounts involved, and generally on the circumstances of the particular case. In the view of the Council there will be many cases in which it would not be reasonable for the auditors of a holding company to seek to duplicate or supplement the examination made of the accounts of a material subsidiary by its own independent external auditors, but cases may arise where this is necessary, for example where consultation with the auditors of a subsidiary leave the holding company's auditors in doubt about the adequacy in some significant respect of the audit examination as a basis for forming their own opinion on the group accounts, or where such consultations or other considerations suggest that it may be necessary to consider important matters which, while not calling for investigation by the auditors of a subsidiary as a part of their duties in relation to its accounts, nevertheless require investigation for the purpose of the group accounts (for example, the extent of inter-company profit included in the cost of stock purchased from other companies in the group and held by the subsidiary at its balance sheet date). Nevertheless, as stated in the opinion of Counsel quoted in paragraph 2 above, it remains the responsibility of the auditors of the holding company to make a decision, as reasonable men, on this matter.

8. Bearing in mind the considerations discussed above, it will often be helpful to arrange that consultation between the auditors is not deferred until the work of the subsidiary's auditors has been completed but begins when this work is being planned.

9. If the auditors of the holding company are denied information or facilities which in their judgment are necessary to enable them to form their opinion on the group accounts, their duty is to state the facts in their report and to make whatever reservation may be appropriate in the expression of their opinion.

RECOMMENDATION ON ACCOUNTING PRINCIPLES, No. 23

Hire-purchase, Credit Sale and Rental Transactions

The Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales makes the following Recommendation to members on the financial accounts of undertakings granting credit facilities for or by way of hire-purchase, credit sale and rental transactions.

These transactions take many forms and the Recommendation which follows deals only with those in most general use. Accounting treatment will depend in each case on the nature of the business transacted and the terms of the relevant agreements. The Recommendation indicates the principles involved and makes recommendations which it is hoped will be helpful to members when advising as to best practice.

The accounting regulations made under the provisions of the Protection of Depositors Act, 1963, are not dealt with in this Recommendation, which is concerned only with accounting principles.

Introduction

IN the context of this Recommendation hire-purchase and credit sale transactions are assumed to have as their purpose the sale of goods on extended credit terms, and rental transactions to relate only to hire. Collectively they are described as instalment credit transactions.

(2) (a) Hire-purchase. Goods are supplied on hire to customers until on the fulfilment of certain conditions (normally the payment of an agreed number of instalments) the customer becomes entitled to exercise an option to purchase. Until this option is exercised the goods remain the property of the supplier.

(b) Credit sale. This involves a contract of sale with payment by instalments. Ownership of the goods passes on delivery by the supplier and a binding debt is created which cannot be avoided by returning the goods.

(c) Rental. The customer enters into a hire agreement for goods, normally for a fixed minimum period with rights of renewal. The agreement does not provide the hirer with an option to purchase; the goods remain the property of the supplier, who may undertake to keep them in working order, and they are returned to him on termination of the agreement.

(3) In all instalment credit transactions finance has to be provided to meet the cost of the goods during the currency of each agreement; the sum involved diminishes as instalments are received.

(4) When a dealer (that is a trader supplying goods) is unable, or does not wish, to provide the necessary finance himself, it can be obtained from specialist companies, referred to as hire-purchase finance companies or simply as finance companies.

PART I – HIRE-PURCHASE FINANCE COMPANIES

Operations

(5) The operations of hire-purchase finance companies extend over a wide variety of financial transactions but their main activities are generally within the following classifications:

(a) The financing of sales on hire-purchase terms. This normally involves the purchase of goods from dealers and letting those goods on hire, with option to purchase, to customers. The customers may be introduced to the hire-purchase finance company by the dealer or may approach the finance company direct; in either case the parties to the contract are the same, namely the hire-purchase finance company and the hirer, and the goods in question are the legal property of the finance company until the hirer fulfils the agreement and exercises his option to purchase. The dealer is not normally a party to the agreement although he may support it either by a guarantee of the hirer's obligations or a repurchase undertaking under which he agrees to buy back the goods from the finance company in the event of default by the hirer.

(b) The purchase from dealers or from other finance companies of contractual rights under instalment credit agreements with third parties. This may be done in respect of single agreements or batches; in the latter case it is normally called 'block discounting'. Procedures for discounting agreements vary but there is generally a master agreement setting out the terms and conditions. In general the seller of the contractual rights is appointed the agent of the hire-purchase finance company to collect the instalments and the payer is not usually notified that the seller's rights under the agreement have been assigned. In a minority of cases this equitable assignment is converted into a legal assignment by notice being given to the payer who is then directed to pay his instalments to the finance company. In the great majority of cases the vendor guarantees the agreements which have been discounted.

Revenue and Expenditure

(6) The finance company's principal source of gross profit arises from the difference between the amount of money which it originally expends in the purchase of goods (in the case of 5 (a)) or the purchase of contractual rights (in the case of 5 (b)) and the total sum which it receives by instalments. A further source of profit is purchase option fees which become payable at the conclusion of agreements when hirers exercise their option to purchase, but these are not normally brought into account until received.

(7) The charges made by finance companies are designed to produce a surplus after meeting the costs of arranging, administering and financing agreements. Since these costs do not accrue evenly over the life of an agreement (for reasons discussed below), the basis adopted for allocating income from finance charges is of prime importance in determining the profits attributable to each accounting period. For example, if the whole of the income from finance charges were brought into account in the first accounting period of a three-year agreement a substantial profit for that year in respect of the agreement would be disclosed, but in subsequent periods there would be no further income from the agreement against which to charge continuing expenses. Moreover, such treatment would ignore the practice of allowing to customers rebates of finance charges for early settlement. A contrary result would be disclosed if income from finance charges were not brought into account until payment of the last instalment. The imprudence of the former treatment and the extreme caution of the latter, together with the material profit distortions to which they give rise, render both these methods inconsistent with the presentation of a true and fair view.

(8) The expenses involved in handling instalment credit transactions may be classified broadly as follows:

(a) Initial expenses. These involve such items as credit status investigations, introductory commissions and preparing and handling the necessary documents. They are partly fixed (for example, administrative expenses not related to the amount financed or the term of the agreement) and partly variable (for example, introductory commissions related to the amount financed).

(b) Administration and collection costs. The costs of collecting and dealing with instalments vary with the quality of the business accepted, the manner in which instalments are paid, and the number rather than the amount of individual instalments.

(c) Cost of money. The cost of financing a hire-purchase agreement is related to the average sum outstanding over the life of the agreement, and, subject to variations in interest rates, is higher in the early life of an agreement, since the cost of finance diminishes as the amount outstanding is reduced.

(d) Bad debts, including legal costs and repossession costs not recovered.

(9) On the basis of matching income with expenditure, it would be reasonable to spread income from finance charges (assuming equal instalments paid regularly on due dates) over the life of an agreement to absorb expenses as follows:

(a) Initial expenses. Sufficient income to cover the estimated initial expenses would be brought into account in the period in which they are incurred.

(b) Administration and collection costs. Sufficient income to cover these would be apportioned in equal instalments over the life of the agreement.

(c) Cost of money. Income sufficient to cover this item would be apportioned over the life of the agreement pro rata to the declining balance outstanding.

Having covered the costs in (a), (b) and (c) above any resultant surplus would be spread over the life of the agreement pro rata to the declining balance outstanding (a finance company's profit being regarded in effect as derived from interest received on sums financed). Out of the total surplus resulting in any accounting period, there would require to be made any provision which may be considered necessary for irrecoverable amounts (including any in respect of instalments not yet due).

(10) At any accounting date an amount of deferred income (also referred to as unearned income, or income yet to mature) would be carried forward to future periods: it must be sufficient to cover the administration, collection and finance costs to be incurred in relation to instalments not yet due, and to provide a surplus at least sufficient to cover bad debts arising in subsequent periods.

(11) The adoption of the theoretical basis described would present considerable problems in practice, involving the continuous analysis and allocation of expenses under each agreement and detailed interest computations. Whilst perhaps practicable for finance companies handling a small number of agreements, the calculations required render it impracticable in the circumstances of companies handling a considerable volume of agreements involving different terms and periods. For practical reasons, therefore, more readily manageable, though necessarily less accurate, methods are normally adopted for computing the allocation of income from finance charges to accounting periods.

Apportionment of Income to Accounting Periods

Actuarial method

(12) The actuarial method is based on the view that the major expense of hire-purchase finance is the cost of money. Income from finance charges is therefore allocated over the lives of agreements in proportion to the reducing balances outstanding. Actuarial or specially prepared interest tables are used to apportion income to different accounting periods. The principal advantages and disadvantages are in essence the same as those discussed below under the 'sum of the digits' method.

Sum of the digits method (sometimes called 'the rule of 78')

(13) This method produces, by another means, an approximation to results produced by the actuarial method, (though it should be recognized that the longer the agreement and the higher the rate of interest involved the greater will be the divergence from actuarial accuracy). Income from finance charges is distributed over the lives of agreements arithmetically in proportion to the reducing balances outstanding. The argument may be stated thus: if the amount of income attributable to the last instalment under an agreement repayable in equal instalments is £x, then the amount of income attributable to the penultimate instalment will be £2x (the balance then outstanding being twice that outstanding at the time of payment of the last instalment); that attributable to the antepenultimate instalment £3x, and so on. In an agreement involving twelve equal monthly instalments the total income from finance charges would be £x+£2x+£3x . . . +£12x=£78x. The first repayment under such an agreement would be computed to contain 12/78 of the total income from finance charges, the second instalment 11/78, the last instalment 1/78 (hence 'rule of 78').

(14) An advantage claimed for the actuarial and sum of the digits methods is that they relate income approximately to the normal incidence of expenses, which as noted are substantially heavier at the start of an agreement's life than at its close. On the other hand the methods fail to differentiate between transactions with proportionately moderate and proportionately heavy initial expenses. Their suitability in any particular case thus depends on the nature of the transaction. They also ignore the fact that collection costs do not reduce with each instalment and that additional expenses both for costs of money and debt collections are incurred when hirers fail to pay instalments promptly when they fall due. Furthermore, they do not allow for any possible subsequent increase in cost of money to service debts already on the books.

Equal instalment or straight line method

(15) Under this method income from finance charges is treated as accruing evenly over the life of each agreement, no attempt being made to relate revenue directly to the expenses incurred in earning it. In favour of this method it is said that by reason of its conservative nature it makes some provision against the many unforeseeable factors and risks inherent in hire-purchase finance, particularly debts for which a specific provision does not appear necessary at the accounting date but which subsequently become bad or doubtful; and also against any subsequent increase in cost of money to service debts already on the books of the finance company. It is, however, open to the objection that since, as noted, expenses do not accrue evenly over the life of an agreement the effect on the financial accounts may be to disclose a low profit (or in some circumstances even a loss) in the early life of an agreement and a high profit in the later stages. Where the volume of business transacted is not subject to sharp fluctuations, the profit or loss shown by the equal instalment method for any accounting period is unlikely to differ materially from that which would be shown by applying the actuarial or sum of the digits methods, and in these circumstances the equal instalment method can be regarded as acceptable.

Modifications

(16) In so far as the above methods depart from the theoretical basis described in paragraphs 9 and 10, modifications are often introduced so as to bring them closer to this basis. For example, immediate credit is sometimes taken for the amount of income appropriate to the initial expenses, the balance of finance charges being spread by one of the above methods over the life of the agreement.

Direct or arbitrary percentage method

(17) The method is sometimes adopted of carrying forward as deferred income at the end of each accounting period a percentage of the outstanding balances on instalment credit accounts. At its crudest, the same percentage is applied from year to year in an arbitrary manner which takes no account of variations in the composition and nature of the accounts outstanding. The results are apt to be inaccurate and unreliable. If however the percentage of outstanding balances to be carried forward as income yet to mature is computed on the basis of a representative current sample of the agreements concerned then the result obtained would approximate to that produced by one or other of the methods noted above. In practice the sample taken is frequently not wide enough to be sufficiently representative of the whole and in this event the method has little to recommend it other than simplicity. The practice of carrying forward the same percentage each year, or a percentage which has been selected without exhaustive examination and testing, cannot be regarded as satisfactory.

Batching

(18) The system of accounting and the volume of agreements current may be such that it is impracticable to seek to apply the computations considered above to each agreement individually. In such circumstances it is customary to batch agreements for treatment in total, each batch being grouped in appropriate categories according to the calendar months (or other suitable periods) in which they were entered into, the rates of hire-purchase charges and the unexpired periods over which they are to run (six, twelve, eighteen months and so on). Thus for each month totals are obtained relating to agreements with like terms, and the necessary computations are then applied to the batch totals.

Recommendations

(19) In the accounts of hire-purchase finance companies the basis adopted for computing income yet to mature under instalment credit agreements should be appropriate to the type of business carried on, should be applied consistently from year to year, and should neither anticipate nor unduly defer income. It should be such that variations in the composition of agreements outstanding, both as to their nature and terms, will be taken into consideration in the computation.

(20) The actuarial or sum of the digits methods are the most suitable theoretical bases for computing income yet to mature. The equal instalment (or straight line) method can give acceptable results where the volume of business is not subject to sharp fluctuations. The direct percentage method should be used only when based on sufficiently large representative and current samples. The method of computation adopted should include such modifications as are judged necessary, having regard to the nature and circumstances of the business, to enable the accounts to show a true and fair view of the trading results and the financial position.

(21) The amount carried forward as deferred or unearned income should not in any case be less than any rebates which would be allowable if all agreements were discharged and settled on the day immediately following the balance sheet date.

Provision for Bad Debts

(22) In considering the provision required for bad debts it is not sufficient to have regard only to overdue accounts, since indications that an agreement will not be fully discharged may appear before repayments fall into arrear. A customer of previous good standing may have called a meeting of his creditors, for instance, or the title to the goods concerned may be disputed by a third party, or it may become known that a dealer has been involved in fraudulent agreements. In these circumstances due consideration should be given to the likely effect on the outstanding debt without waiting for arrears to arise.

(23) There are two main methods of determining the provision for bad debts. One involves the individual assessment of accounts; the other involves the application of percentages, based on experience, to the totals of balances outstanding.

Individual assessment method

(24) This involves close examination of all overdue and suspect accounts. Where only one instalment is in arrear potential default is not necessarily indicated, but where more than one instalment is in arrear the account may be regarded as dubious. In assessing the amount to be set aside where a debt is judged to be bad, due account is taken of the likely net receipts on disposal of repossessed goods, of the likelihood of any further payment being obtained from the customer, of any available recourse to dealers (whose own credit standing, in the light of other possible attributable defaults, requires examination) and of any relevant guarantees (which also require assessment on their own merits). Account is also taken of any legal expenses accrued on accounts judged bad or doubtful, and of any additional costs likely to be incurred in repossession or enforcement. Similar consideration is given to accounts which are not overdue but in connection with which information is available indicating the possibility of loss.

Percentage method

(25) Where individual assessment of debts is regarded as not practicable the alternative is to adopt the percentage method. To be satisfactory, this should be (a) based on recent experience and current information, brought under frequent and regular review; and (b) applied to suitably analysed totals of each main category of outstandings. This involves classifying customers' accounts according to the types of merchandise on hire, the degree of risk (i.e. finance company's own risk, dealers' risk and so on) and the value of the supporting security. Accounts are then further analysed by reference to their current condition (for example, according to the number of instalments in arrear, whether merchandise has been repossessed and not sold, whether merchandise has been repossessed and sold, whether special difficulties are involved, and so on).

(26) Sometimes an arbitrary percentage of the amounts financed under instalment agreements outstanding, fixed, say, by reference to bad debt experience of previous years, is used to compute the provision for bad debts. A modification of this method is to apply to accounts in arrear percentages which increase on a sliding scale according to the number of instalments overdue.

(27) The application of percentages to balances outstanding has the advantage of simplicity. However, unless care is taken to examine up-to-date representative samples of accounts in the light of current bad debt experience, this method will fail to reflect material changes in the nature or terms of business transacted, or other circumstances likely to affect bad debts, and must be regarded as unreliable.

Recommendation

(28) Whenever practicable the provision for bad debts should preferably be assessed by reference to individual accounts. Where this is not practicable, percentages based on current experience and drawn from representative samples of adequate proportions may be applied to suitably analysed account totals. Specific provision should be made to cover all accounts considered bad or doubtful at the balance sheet date, and the amount set aside for income yet to mature should include an adequate general provision against further bad debts that experience has shown may arise in respect of balances considered good at the balance sheet date.

Treatment and Description in Accounts

(29) Although in law a hire-purchase agreement is no more than a contract of hire carrying an option to purchase, the intention to purchase is normally presumed and for accounting purposes it is the generally accepted practice to show hirers in the accounts of hire-purchase finance companies as debtors for the total sums financed.

(30) The amount set aside in respect of income yet to mature in the accounts of finance companies is a significant item. It may be disclosed in the balance sheet either as a deduction from the total amount of instalments outstanding, or under a separate heading on the liabilities side. The former treatment however has the advantage of recognizing the fact that at the date of the balance sheet the present value of the instalments outstanding is less than the gross amount receivable (having regard to finance and collection costs, provision for which is included in the amount set aside for income yet to mature).

(31) The Eighth Schedule to the Companies Act, 1948, requires the accounts of companies to disclose the amount of interest on the company's debentures and other fixed loans. A substantial part of the funds of most hire-purchase finance companies is obtained from public deposits, bank and other short-term advances, and the total amount of interest paid is an informative figure.

Recommendations

(32) Amounts financed under instalment credit transactions should be shown separately in the balance sheet and suitably described.

(33) Income yet to mature should be shown separately in the balance sheet as a deduction from the assets to which it specifically relates.

(34) The accounts should contain a statement of the basis or bases adopted in computing the amount shown as income yet to mature. In the event of the basis being changed for any reason regard should be had to paragraph 14 (6) (b) of the Eighth Schedule to the Companies Act, 1948, and any material effect on the profit and loss account for the current year should be disclosed, together with a note of the amount by which the preceding year's profit would have been affected if the same basis had been applied.

(35) The total charge for interest payable should be disclosed and adequately described in the profit and loss account; the aggregate of bank interest, interest to depositors and other interest on short-term indebtedness should be distinguished from interest on debentures and other fixed loans.

PART II – DEALERS

(36) The treatment of instalment credit transactions in dealers' accounts depends on the nature of the agreements and the legal relationship existing between the parties. Agreements may be financed by the dealer himself, or alternatively the dealer may assign his contractual rights to a finance company, as described above (paragraph 5 (b)).

AGREEMENTS FINANCED BY DEALERS

Hire-purchase and Credit Sale Agreements

(37) Where a dealer disposes of goods to customers by way of hire-purchase or credit sale agreements which he himself finances and to which he remains a principal party, his profit on due completion of the contracts is derived from (a) his trading profit arising from the cash sale price of the goods and (b) any added finance charges. Out of the aggregate of these he has to meet his normal selling and administration expenses, and the additional costs of financing and administering agreements.

(38) As noted in connection with hire-purchase finance companies, agreements which extend over more than one accounting period give rise to the problem of apportioning profits, and a basis must be selected on which to compute the amount to be carried forward at the end of each accounting period in respect of trading profit and finance charges not yet earned.

(39) The methods adopted in practice vary according to the nature of the business and the form of agreement. Some methods deal separately with trading profits and finance charges, using different bases of apportionment. So far as finance charges are concerned, under both hire-purchase and credit sale agreements it is normal to carry forward a proportion relating to instalments not yet due on one of the bases described in paragraphs 12 to 17.

(40) In the case of hire-purchase agreements sale does not take place until the hirer exercises his option to purchase, and the goods concerned remain legally the property of the vendor until that time. Accordingly the amount set aside for trading profit not yet earned is sometimes computed by reference to the gross trading profit percentage appropriate to the cash price of the goods in question. On the other hand, particularly where the amounts involved are immaterial, credit is sometimes taken immediately for the whole of the trading profit on hire-purchase transactions, subject only to provision for future financing and collection costs and bad debts. Various intermediate methods are also in common use.

(41) In the case of credit sale agreements credit is normally taken for the whole of the trading profit on the cash price of the goods in the period in which the agreements are entered into, since by definition sale has been completed, though instalments may remain outstanding.

(42) Certain types of hire-purchase and credit sale agreements may include an undertaking by the dealer to provide free maintenance of the goods concerned over a stated period. The costs of providing such service must be met out of the relevant revenue, and in these circumstances the amount carried forward normally includes an appropriate allowance for such costs.

Recommendations

(43) Where material there should be disclosed separately in a dealer's balance sheet, suitably described, the total amounts outstanding (after provisions for bad debts), (a) under hire-purchase agreements and (b) under credit sale agreements; in each case there should be shown as a deduction the total carried forward in respect of trading profit, collection and finance charges relating to future periods,

(44) (a) (i) Where dealers finance their own hire-purchase transactions with customers there should be carried forward in their accounts, computed on a basis consistently applied and appropriate to the nature of the business, an amount in respect of trading profit and finance charges not yet earned.

(ii) The amount carried forward in respect of trading profit not yet earned should consist of the proportion of trading profit estimated to relate to instalments receivable in future accounting periods, being not less than the percentage of net trading profit nor more than the percentage of gross trading profit appropriate to the goods in question.

(iii) The amount carried forward in respect of finance charges not yet earned should be the proportion of the charges relating to instalments receivable in future accounting periods. The most suitable bases for computing income yet to mature are the actuarial or sum of the digits methods, or such modifications thereof as may be necessary, having regard to the nature and circumstances of each business, to enable the accounts to show a true and fair view. The equal instalment (or straight line method) can give acceptable results where the volume of business is not subject to sharp fluctuations.

(iv) The total amount carried forward in respect of trading profit and finance charges not yet earned should not be less than the greater of (a) the estimated cost of free maintenance, finance and collection charges relating to future periods; or (b) any rebates which would be allowed if all agreements were discharged and all obligations settled on the day immediately following the balance sheet date.

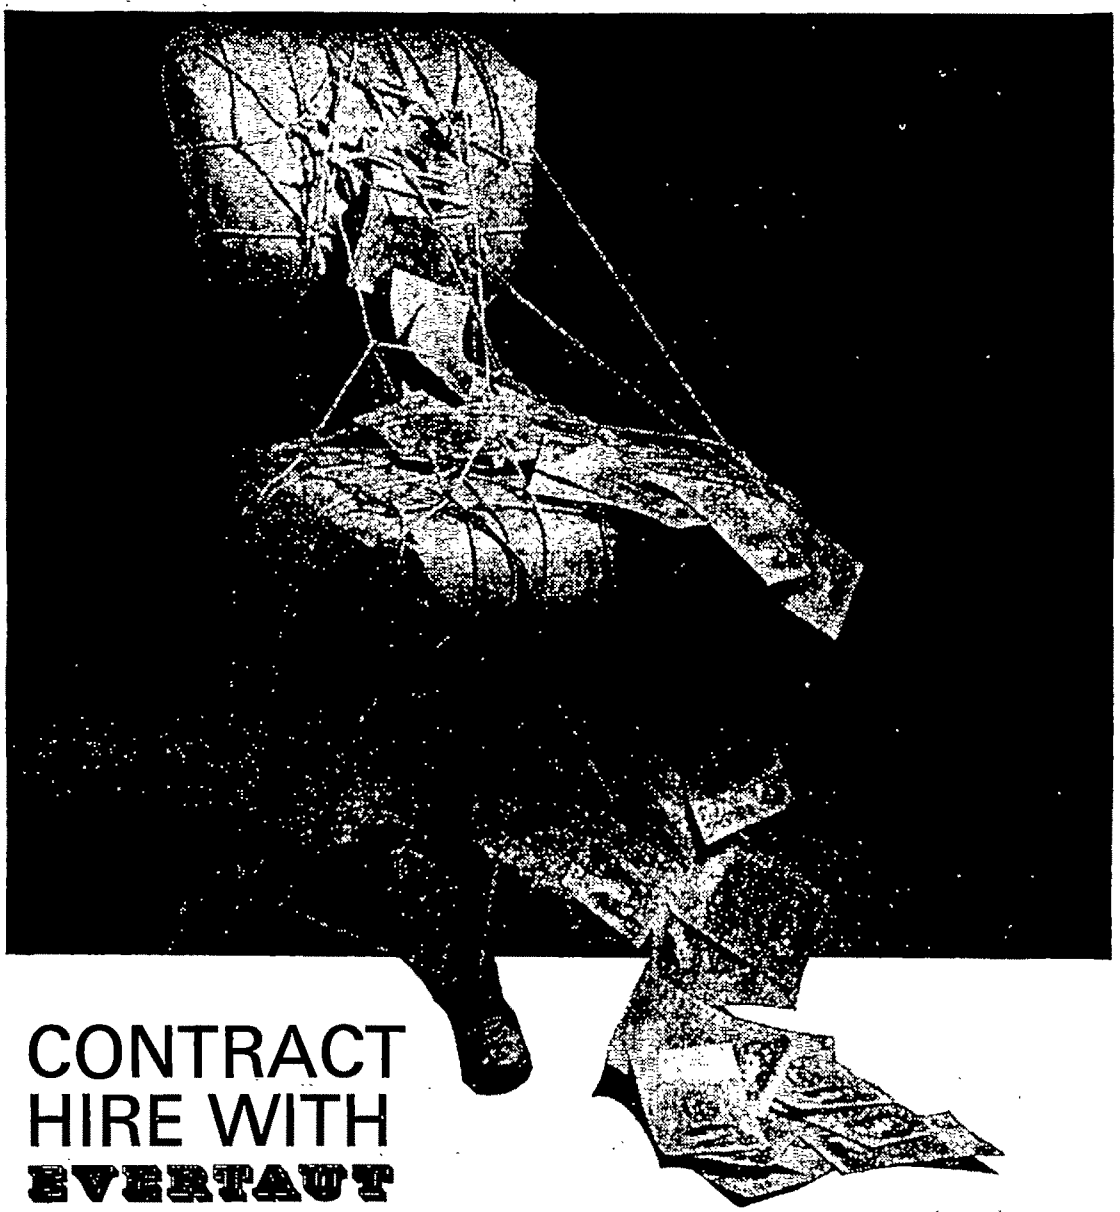
(b) As regards sales by dealers under credit sale agreements, it is proper to take credit immediately for the trading profit on the cash price of the goods concerned provided that adequate provision is made for future free maintenance and finance and collection costs relating to balances not yet due.

(c) Specific provision should be made for all accounts considered bad or doubtful at the balance sheet date and the amount carried forward as income yet to mature should include an adequate general provision against further bad debts that experience has shown may arise in respect of balances considered good at the balance sheet date.

(45) In the event of a change in the basis of computing amounts carried forward in respect of trading profit and finance charges not yet earned the effect, if material, should be adequately disclosed.

Rental Agreements

(46) Goods out on rental are normally treated in the accounts of dealers (here taken to include undertakings specializing in rental business) as fixed assets and are written down to their estimated residual value over the period of their revenue-producing lives.



(47) Rentals are normally payable at regular intervals in advance, and credit is taken in the dealer's accounts for rentals received and receivable after adjusting for any portion relating to subsequent accounting periods. Where rental payments have fallen into arrear additional provisions may require to be made against non-recovery of debts and costs of repossession of goods.

Recommendations

(48) (a) Goods out on rental, if material, should be shown separately in the balance sheet, preferably grouped with fixed assets.

(b) The basis of arriving at the amount at which they are stated should be indicated.

AGREEMENTS FINANCED BY FINANCE COMPANIES

(49) It is common for dealers to enter into arrangements with hire-purchase finance companies to provide finance for instalment credit agreements. The normal arrangements are described in paragraph 5. The legal effects of finance agreements between dealers and finance houses are sometimes complex, and are dealt with here only in so far as they affect dealers' accounts.

(50) It will have been noted from paragraph 5 that the dealer may (a) sell goods to a finance company which in turn enters into hire-purchase or credit sale agreements with customers, or (b) enter into hire-purchase or credit sale agreements with customers and sell his rights under such agreements to a finance company. Under (a) customers may pay instalments direct to the finance company (direct collection) or to the dealer who then accounts to the finance company (agency collection). Under (b) the dealer normally collects but in a minority of cases a legal assignment of rights is executed and the customer pays direct to the finance company.

(51) Where the dealer is not a party to contracts with his customers, but sells direct to a finance company, immediate credit is normally taken in his accounts for sales and provision is made for losses expected to arise under any guarantees given.

(52) Where dealers sell contractual rights under hire-purchase or credit sale agreements by means of a block-discounting transaction, part or all of these rights become immediately converted into cash and to that extent (but after making provision in respect of any indemnities or guarantees given by the dealer) there is an accelerated realization of profit which would otherwise have been deferred and brought to credit during the period of the agreements concerned.

(53) If the dealer collects instalments and accounts for them to the finance company under an agency collection agreement provision will require to be made for the cost of providing this service, in so far as it is not covered by any collection commission.

Indemnities and Guarantees

(54) Agreements with finance companies frequently include recourse clauses by which the dealer undertakes to indemnify or guarantee the contracting finance company against loss or to repurchase goods in the event of default by the customer. The existence and terms of such clauses may have material implications as regards provision for liabilities, and financing agreements should be carefully studied to determine their financial consequences.

(55) Block-discounting agreements normally provide that the finance company should retain against possible defaults a specified proportion – perhaps 25 per cent – of the collection value of the agreements discounted. The sum retained is recovered by the dealer as the discounted agreements are discharged. Block-discounting agreements sometimes require the dealer to accept bills drawn on him by the finance company as collateral security. The bills would be presented only in the event of default by the dealer – normally they are returned and cancelled as agreements are discharged.

(56) Under agency collection agreements, the existence of a recourse clause entails a careful examination of customers' balances in order to make adequate provision for bad debts. Where instalments are collected by the finance company the dealer has no record of customers' accounts; although the finance company should normally give the dealer early notification of any default he will not necessarily be in a position to assess all outstanding accounts as regards bad debts, and in these circumstances contingent liabilities will exist.

Recommendations

(57) Where a dealer has entered into outside financing arrangements regard should be had to the terms of the agreements concerned and effect given to their financial consequences in the dealers' accounts so as to present a true and fair view. The basis adopted should be applied consistently from year to year.

(58) Where a dealer is not a party to instalment credit agreements and is not responsible for the collection of instalments, sale to a finance company may properly be treated as an outright sale. Where the dealer has guaranteed payment of the amounts due under the contract between the finance company and the customer, or has undertaken to repurchase the goods in the event of default by the customer, adequate provision should be made for claims expected to arise under such arrangements, based on such information as may be available. The existence of a contingent liability should be stated by way of note, and where practicable the amount, or estimated amount, disclosed.

(59) Where a dealer is not a party to instalment credit agreements or has sold such agreements to a finance company they are not his assets and should not be shown as such in his balance sheet. Where the finance company withholds part of the purchase consideration, this should be shown as a debt less the unearned profit applicable thereto and less any bad debts provision considered necessary.

(60) Where the dealer is responsible under guarantee for collection of debts on behalf of a finance company adequate provision should be made against both future collection costs and bad debts. The amount of unpaid instalments guaranteed (less provision for bad debts already made) should be disclosed.

Weekly Notes

INSTITUTE'S NEW COUNCIL MEMBER

MR R. W. COX, F.C.A., senior partner in the firm of Stanley Blythen & Co, Chartered Accountants, of Nottingham, was elected a member of the Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales at the meeting of the Council held on February 3rd (reported elsewhere in this issue).

Mr R. W. Cox

Mr Cox, who is aged 58, was educated at Nottingham High School and served his articles with his present firm. He was admitted to membership of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales in 1929, becoming a partner in his firm in 1934. He served on the Committee of The Nottingham Society of Chartered Accountants from 1947 to 1963 during which time he was, from 1957 to 1958, President of the Society. From 1951 to 1956 he represented the Society on the Taxation and Research Committee of the Institute. Mr Cox has also served as President of The Nottingham Chartered Accountants' Students' Society – from 1960 to 1961.

THE ENGINEERING INDUSTRY AND THE BUDGET

THE Engineering Industries Association has sent a letter to the Chancellor of the Exchequer asking him to publish an explanatory leaflet with the coming Finance Bill, and in the meantime to remove some of the uncertainties about his intentions. With the letter went two memoranda, one on the threatened capital gains tax, the other on the threatened corporation tax. These have been prepared by the taxation committee of the Association.

The first memorandum calls for a moderate rate of tax, divorced from ordinary tax rates, and allowing for long-term gains which have been thrown up largely by progressive inflation. It is suggested that the capital gains tax should not apply to disposals of business assets. As to the omnibus valuation which is to take place as at April 5th, 1965, the memorandum points out that the valuation of shares in unquoted companies has caused immense difficulties with the Estate Duty office.

If the rate of corporation tax is less than the combined rates of income tax and profits tax (as everyone hopes) then the E.I.A. expects a system of direction in order to collect tax on profits retained unreasonably. It hopes that this system will be applied with moderation. There should be exemption and abatement for small businesses, and the permitted maximum remuneration for full-time directors should not be less than £5,000. Some ministers of the Crown appear to have satisfied themselves that they are worth far more than that.

The memorandum asks that the rate of corporation tax for the year 1966–67 be announced in April 1965. It also asks that any reduction in rate below current rates should also give rise to higher capital allowances, so as to maintain the relief already enjoyed on expenditure on new plant etc. Three more points are covered: avoidance of double taxation of 'franked income', reasonable treatment of overseas trade corporations, and special consideration of cases where losses are brought forward.

P.A.Y.E. SHAKE-UP

AS reported in our issue of August 1st last, the Inland Revenue is to install a computer at East Kilbride in Scotland which will eventually take over the whole of the P.A.Y.E. records 'north of the border'. The Inland Revenue have now published a leaflet headed 'Pay as you Earn: Automatic Data Processing' which sets out their plans.

The intention is to transfer all P.A.Y.E. work now done in local tax offices to a computer-based system, a transfer which is expected to take about ten years, and will proceed region by region. Scotland is the first and the transfer will commence in 1968. The leaflet is issued for the purpose of giving Scottish employers a brief outline of the proposed new system and to indicate some of the major changes which will be necessary.

In each region there will be a Schedule E Centre responsible for the P.A.Y.E. work in the area. The P.A.Y.E. functions of local tax offices will consist solely of giving general advice at interviews, to those taxpayers who can make the journey. At East Kilbride there will be a new building and a computer with 1,200 staff to serve it. The transfer to East Kilbride will involve both paper files and also the setting up of new files on magnetic tape, and will be completed not later than April 5th, 1970. It will be in two phases, one for large employers and the other for the remaining employers, and each will last about a year. Employees will be traced through their National Insurance numbers; employers by special standardized six numeric digit references which will requiring him to pay surtax on the grossed-up equivalent of £18,002 paid to him by a company in redemption of debentures held by him. These debentures were bonus debentures issued by the company and paid up out of accumulated profits as long ago as 1953. They claimed that the redemption of the debentures was a 'transaction in securities' within the meaning of section 28, and that Mr Parker had obtained a tax advantage, to wit, the avoidance of surtax on the grossed-up equivalent of the £18,002.

Lord Denning and Lord Justice Danckwerts held, according to The Guardian, that there was no 'transaction in securities'. Both they and Lord Justice Diplock held that Mr Parker had obtained no tax advantage at the relevant time. The Court gave the Inland Revenue leave to appeal to the House of Lords.

FOTHERGALE CO LTD – VI

LAST Tuesday's episode of this B.B.C.-2 series was supposed to have as its principle theme the subject of 'overheads', but, even when all allowances were made, most accountants who happened to eavesdrop on the commercial director, Tom Rudyard, whilst he was indulging his fancy (or should we say fantasy?) for statistical formulae must have wrung their hands in despair.

Marginal costing techniques are familiar territory to industrial accountants but we think that few of them would disagree with the view that Rudyard's apparent over-familiarity with the subject leads him to treat it with far more contempt than it deserves. If they are properly used, these techniques can be of great commercial value when fixing prices in certain business situations – but unless treated with a degree of circumspection they can become a double-edged weapon.

The trouble with this 'Tuesday Term' series is that it has been vested with a spurious and unwarranted air of authenticity which could mislead the uncritical viewer into believing that if he stands in front of a blackboard and mutters such incantations as 'network analysis', 'scatter diagrams', 'regression analysis', or any other convenient portmanteau catchword that springs to mind, then, hey presto! all his problems will vanish overnight. Unfortunately, business life is a little more complicated than this and whilst there is a genuine need for lucid explanations of some of the newer management techniques, they should not be foisted on an unsuspecting audience in the way they have been in this series.

Finance and Commerce

Watney Mann

THE accounts of Watney Mann Ltd, the brewers, from which this week's reprint is taken, are noteworthy because of the statement of a turnover figure for the first time. But it is a figure which the chairman, Mr S. H. Combe, provides with certain reservations.

Shareholders, Mr Combe says, will know that the board 'has always regarded it as being of the greatest importance that shareholders should be at all times in the best possible position to judge the value of the shares they own'. The cynics might say that the board's policy stems from the attempted take-over some years ago by Mr Charles Clore which first drew attention to the worth of brewery company property.

But be that as it may, the Watney Mann accounts do show a desire to be informative. The value of group income is given this year for the first time and the figure is £100·8 million. 'The reason why we have not disclosed this in the past', Mr Combe says, 'is not that we have been secretive but that the figure itself is of relatively small importance in our industry'.

Mr Combe considers that if the figure is to be of any value at all the method of arriving at it has to be clearly defined. The figure, which compares with £82·4 million for 1962–63, comprises rents received from outside the group plus sales to customers outside the group. All inter-company transactions have been eliminated, including sales at wholesale prices to the group's managed retail outlets, but the retail sales of the latter have been included.

Breakdown

What is of far greater significance, Mr Combe considers, is the breakdown of each £1 of income which appeared with the accounts for the first time last year and which is included in our reprint. The company produces half-yearly figures of profits up to March 31st at the time of the interim dividend announcement in June and at the same time an indication is given of current trade conditions.

The announcement of full-year results in early December and the chairman's indication of trading trends at the annual meeting at the end of January keep shareholders pretty well in touch. Half-yearly reporting in the brewery trade needs to be treated carefully. The dates of Easter in two successive years can affect materially the comparison of the profits of two half-years. Because of this, the Watney Mann board considers that the publication of quarterly profit figures would be not merely meaningless but misleading.

Commenting on the latest accounts, Mr Combe

NOTES on the Accounts—30th September, 1964
(comparable figures in [italics])

1. SUBSIDIARY COMPANIES ACQUIRED DURING THE YEAR

The profit of Steward & Patteson Limited and its subsidiary companies included in the accounts are for the eleven months ended 30th September, 1964.

2. COMPARABLE FIGURES

The 1963 figures in the accounts have been adjusted where necessary so as to be on, as nearly as possible, a comparable basis with 1964. They include comparable figures of companies which, although acquired after 30th September, 1963, were members of the group at 30th September, 1964, and the effects of an issue of debenture stock made in connection with these acquisitions.

3. PREMISES, PLANT, CASKS and other TRADE EQUIPMENT, FIXTURES AND MOTOR VEHICLES—Group Balance Sheet

In the first column above certain items of freeholds and leaseholds are included at valuations made at various dates, and casks and other trade equipment have been included at valuations based on their estimated remaining useful life. The other assets, with the exception of certain items included at 1948 book values, are therein at cost.
Certain expenditure on properties and plant in respect of additions, improvements and major alterations has been charged against general revenue reserve. Leaseholds, fixtures and furniture, plant and motor vehicles have been depreciated by charges against profits and certain leaseholds have been further depreciated out of the general revenue reserve. Certain fixtures and furniture have been dealt with on a renewals basis and no depreciation has been charged in respect of them. In respect of other fixtures and furniture, plant and motor vehicles there has been a change in the basis of calculating depreciation during the year, resulting in an adjustment made on capital reserve.
The written down tax value of plant, casks and other trade equipment, fixtures and furniture and motor vehicles which are eligible for capital allowances is £11,585,973 compared with a net book value of £14,351,422.

4. TRADE INVESTMENTS

Of the total of trade investments in the group balance sheet (£1,024,365) £708,336 were quoted investments; the market value of these was £1,365,398.

5. STOCKS—Group Balance Sheet

Stocks held for ultimate realisation have been valued at the lower of cost and net realisable value. Stocks held for other purposes have been valued by writing down their cost in proportion to their estimated remaining useful life; in certain cases such stocks have been valued at the cost of a base stock, renewals being written off against profits.

says: 'Following our usual practice the published figures for 1963 have been adjusted where necessary to provide the best possible comparison for those of 1964'. 'The most accurate comparison' would probably have been a better choice of words but the point is taken. The stock profit of £473,738 arising from the Budget increase in excise duties has been excluded from group profits and, less tax, has been put to reserve.

Trade Investments

Trade investments appear at cost in the latest accounts and Note 4 shows that the market value of quoted investments exceeds their cost by £657,000. The market value of trade investments, shareholders are told, will appear in the accounts when a revaluation of properties is incorporated. It was not possible to complete the revaluation in time for this year's figures as was originally intended.

Expenditure on improving licensed houses is always a heavy item in a brewery company. In the past year the item was heavier than ever for Watney Mann. Fourteen new houses cost £524,604, thirteen rebuildings cost £321,680 and fifty-five major alterations cost £459,246. In addition there were hundreds of minor alterations as well as a maintenance bill of £1,635,000.

Over the past two years the cost of new work has risen by nearly 10 per cent and of repairs by 12½ per cent, reflecting the steep rise in building costs. No capital expenditure on the structure of licensed houses ranks for tax relief.

Rank Hovis

ANOTHER company providing a turnover figure for the first time – with reservations – is Rank Hovis McDougall Ltd. The company refrained from giving turnover before because of the various ways in which the figure could be expressed. The Stock Exchange, however, has helped the board to make up its mind by defining turnover as external group net sales.

On that basis, Rank Hovis McDougall's turnover was £254 million for 1963–64, and if sales made within the group involving further processing were included the total would be increased by £39 million. The company is going further along the Stock Exchange recommendation path by deciding to give half-year figures.

The switching of August Bank Holiday to the last Monday in August has created a problem for the company which ends its financial year on August 31st. Serious stocktaking problems would arise, especially in the bakery companies, should the year-end fall on the Saturday of the August Bank Holiday week-end. The accounting date has therefore been changed to the first Saturday after August 29th in each year, which means that the current financial year will end on September 4th next.

CITY NOTES

TO the detriment of equity shares, the investment accent is currently placed very much on fixed interest stocks. Five major corporation issues plus a run of industrial debenture placings have mopped up institutional funds and there are still more operations of this kind on the stocks, some of them involving up to £15 million.

Industrial debentures carrying a 6¾ per cent coupon and placed at a point or so under par are undoubtedly an attractive proposition and, while Bank rate stays at 7 per cent, there must be a ready market for this type of stock. Anticipation of a Bank rate reduction before the Budget – some say before the end of this month – has brought strong demand for medium-dated Government stocks.

Compared with the interest and activity in this end of the stock-market, business in equities is at a comparatively low ebb. Company results have continued to be good enough to induce gains in the shares concerned but the overall tone remains sluggish.

The long shadow of the Budget is already touching the market and continued slackness in the equity sections seems likely.

Auditors and Computers

SIR, – May I, as a reader of your journal, comment on the report on the Municipal Treasurers' Computer Conference, headed 'Audit and computers', in your issue of January 30th?

From nothing more than a practical knowledge of the development of machine accounting systems and the problems associated with that, my own view would be that accountants, as a professional group, are in great danger of falling even further behind the technological advances which have been made in the last five years. That they are currently behind technologically is clear from the fact that the professional bodies themselves are trying very hard to increase substantially the amount of education in this field. That they are in danger of falling further behind a very rapidly increasing state of technological development is clear from reports such as the one I refer to which manage, in my view, to convey an impression that the major problems are not even yet seen.

There are only two ways in which an auditor can be convinced that a computer system is sound, accurate and capable of check. The first method is if he actually lives with the development of the system, through systems and programming, and this would entail the auditor himself being a trained systems analyst/programmer. Even then, this in itself would entail either a complete pairing of work so that every program was written by two men, of which one was an auditor, or alternatively, that all systems analysis and programming was done by the auditors themselves. In the long run and even more definitely in the short run, this is, I am sure, impossible of attainment.

The second method auditors can adopt to ensure the accuracy of the system is for them to prove in detail the systems analysis work and then take advantage of the greatly increased ability of the machine system to provide control figures. The situation I think we have to compare here is not the theoretical one of the present method of manual systems against the future, but the practical differences between auditing a system operated by a large number of people as against a system in which the machine replaces the individual operators. Auditors have never been capable of ensuring that every individual clerk carried out management instructions precisely. All that they have been able to do is to sample the method of calculation and check that the totals moving in and out and within the system agree.

Given that they can sample more easily individual cases by test running of the system before, during and after development and that they can, by reasonable foresight, obtain much more easily the printout of individual, intermediate and total figures, it seems clear to me that much more time should be spent by them on devising much more adequate and, indeed, complete controls which are within their grasp in the future. If, as has happened, they spend their time worrying about the case in the million where the machine may make a mistake then they will certainly miss the great opportunities that lie before them and will deserve to be relegated to a vanishing role as book-keepers.

Yours faithfully,

Ross-on-Wye. G. A. FISHER.

The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants

Local Government Organization

Memorandum of Evidence to

COMMITTEE ON STAFFING

1. The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants submits this evidence in accordance with the committee's terms of reference, and in the knowledge that the committee will be concerned particularly with questions of recruitment and training and not directly with questions of pay.

2. A summary of the Institute's activities and membership is attached. (Not reproduced – Editor.)

3. The main object of the Institute is the promotion of the science of local government finance and accountancy. The committee will note that the Institute is a professional body which is not concerned with the advancement of individual members. It is precluded by its Royal Charter from engaging in transactions with a view to the pecuniary gain or profit of its members.

4. The committee will observe that Chartered Municipal Treasurers of the Institute serve all types of local authority; that with very few exceptions the treasurer or chief financial officer of all but the smaller local authorities are members of the Institute; and that the Institute and modern local government can be said to have grown up together.

5. The accountancy profession in the United Kingdom is arranged very broadly in three streams covering the accountant in private practice, the commercial and industrial accountant, and the accountant in the public service. Although the distinction is blurred, the divisions have mainly arisen through differences in the emphasis placed on different methods of training accountants. The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants has developed since its establishment in 1885 alongside the growing complexity of local government, but its specialization has also been partly due to the need for a qualification which had particular regard to the needs of the service.

6. Training for the profession is by a combination of practical 'on the job' service and theoretical training through correspondence courses, which are gradually giving way to or being supplemented by oral tuition. The students' societies play a major part in the training of potential Institute members, and the strength of the Institute owes a great deal to the vigour and enterprise of the students' societies. Their work is, however, entirely voluntary, carried out mainly in members' own time and at mainly their own expense.

General Basis of Institute's Evidence

7. The Institute's views on the recruitment and training of staff are based on the following propositions:

(a) Local government should present to the prospective employee an 'image' of an efficient and progressive organization with a coherent purpose.

(b) Local government should be seen to have adequate career opportunities in terms of interesting and vital work, professional advancement and suitable financial rewards.

(c) There should be clear acceptance of employer responsibility for training, and training for the various levels and professions of local government should be reorganized in a more integrated fashion.

(d) A recruitment policy needs to be developed, based on a clear appreciation of needs as they arise.

8. It follows that we consider that local authorities and their Associations should assume a much greater role in recruiting and training its officers than it has in the past, and that suitable machinery should be developed to achieve a better balance in training arrangements to eliminate some of the frustration arising from the present situation, which itself tends to reflect on the image of local government.

9. Although we stress the need for greater local government participation in recruitment and training, we would also emphasize that the development of a rather more unified 'local government service' should not be at the expense of professional and vocational training which in encouraging the maintenance and improvement of standards of service has a vital part to play in its future prospects.

Professional Finance Staff

10. The committee will wish to consider the question of the recruitment, training and use of staff in local government as broadly as possible, and we therefore consider the place of professional staff in local government before making recommendations on their recruitment, training and use.

11. Should new entrants be recruited to the local government service in a similar manner to the Civil Service, or should they be recruited to train for specific professions or technical skills in local government?

The Institute does not believe that it would be to the advantage of local government to adopt the Civil Service arrangement for the following reasons:

(a) The basic roles of the Civil Service and local government are very different. The role of a central Government department is largely administrative and advisory, whereas local government departments are providing services and directly administering them day to day. In this, a large professional and technical element is essential.

(b) Local authority services are smaller units than central Government departments and individually would not be able to select staff from the top stream of universities on an adequate scale.

12. For the same reasons, we do not consider that training for the local government service could be provided by a single training organization or scheme. Knowledge of some subjects, however, is part of the essential equipment of all professional, technical and administrative staff, and some of whose needs can best be met by a common approach.

13. We consider that to offer potential candidates a professional, technical, or vocational career in the local government service is more likely to be attractive than offering service in local government generally. We think it is to the advantage of local government that a person's basic training should be to reach a professional, technical or vocational standard set to meet the needs of the individual local government services.

Recruitment – General

14. The Institute's present entry requirements are based on recruitment of 16- and 17-year-old entrants at present based on five G.C.E. 'O' level subjects, and in fact most entrants submit the minimum requirements. It is, however, becoming increasingly evident that we shall need to review and improve the standard of entry soon, at least so far as potential finalists are concerned. The need for improvement arises because:

(a) local government needs the services of senior staff of higher calibre than the present 'O' level entrant. This will be increasingly so in future;

(b) in future an increasing proportion of children will be receiving university or further education.

15. The present intake is inadequate both in number and in quality. Raising the entry standard does not of itself ensure that sufficient entrants will be forthcoming at a prescribed level and, although it is not practicable to determine on information at present available the numbers of entrants who will be required at this level, it is clear that determined efforts will need to be made to secure the services of staff in competition with other organizations.

Recruitment Policy – Accountants

16. If it is accepted that an increasing proportion of university graduates needs to be recruited, then the local government service needs to be organized so that it is no less attractive and efficient in the recruitment of graduates than other large-scale organizations.

17. Most graduates have attended universities away from their homes, and consequently are prepared to consider jobs anywhere in the country. Decisions are made very often at the universities, and it is here that local authorities must recruit. In short, local government must go and get them.

18. Although we recognize that recruits must be appointed to individual local authorities, we recommend that consideration be given to the establishment of an ad hoc agency which should:

(a) be responsible for publicizing to universities and to graduates the careers available in the local government service;
(b) give advice to graduates;
(c) advertise. (National advertising for recruitment can improve the image of local government);
(d) act as a clearing-house for applications;
(e) give advice to local authorities on changes from time to time in conditions of service, training, and pay, necessary to maintain the level of recruitment and of graduates.

19. The agency will be concerned to recruit graduates for the local government service generally, but it should offer them specific professional, technical and vocational careers within the service. It would, however, be desirable for the new graduate entrant to have the opportunity of attending a short induction course during his first few weeks in the service so that he may see more clearly the nature of the choice of career that is open to him.

20. There may also be some recruitment of staff from further education establishments other than the universities. Whether recruitment from these establishments should be the concern of the agency, or whether it should be left to local initiative is a question for consideration, but as they are at present locally based, we suggest that they should be outside the arrangements for the recruitment agency. Local authorities should, however, co-ordinate their recruitment policies within the 'catchment areas' of such establishments.

21. Whatever the source of recruitment, the Institute recommends that arrangements be made to ensure that potential trainee accountants can be offered systematic training facilities leading to the attainment of professional status. Training facilities should include:

(a) Early opportunity to register as a trainee with the professional body.
(b) The opportunity and encouragement to attend appropriate training courses. This implies an increase in courses available.
(c) An adequate range of practical experience.

22. Authorities advertising for trainee accountants should be required to give these basic facilities to the trainee.

Arrangements of this kind, on a systematic basis, will help to ensure that the potential recruit can see more clearly what lies ahead of him, step by step. Training should not be left to chance.

23. We also recommend that recruitment would be facilitated if the trainee accountant could be offered:

(a) Firm career prospects, with minimum salaries prescribed on appointment and following qualification, which are seen to be comparable with those offered for posts involving similar responsibilities elsewhere.
(b) Conditions of service which make it clear that he is entering a career of public service where he is protected against unreasonable dismissal.
(c) Adequate post-qualification training.
(d) Clear and open promotion prospects.
(e) A private employer/employee relationship, to provide that no discussion takes place in public upon a named employee's pay, conduct or quality of service. (We recognize that the scales of salary are of public interest, but consider that these should be discussed impersonally.)

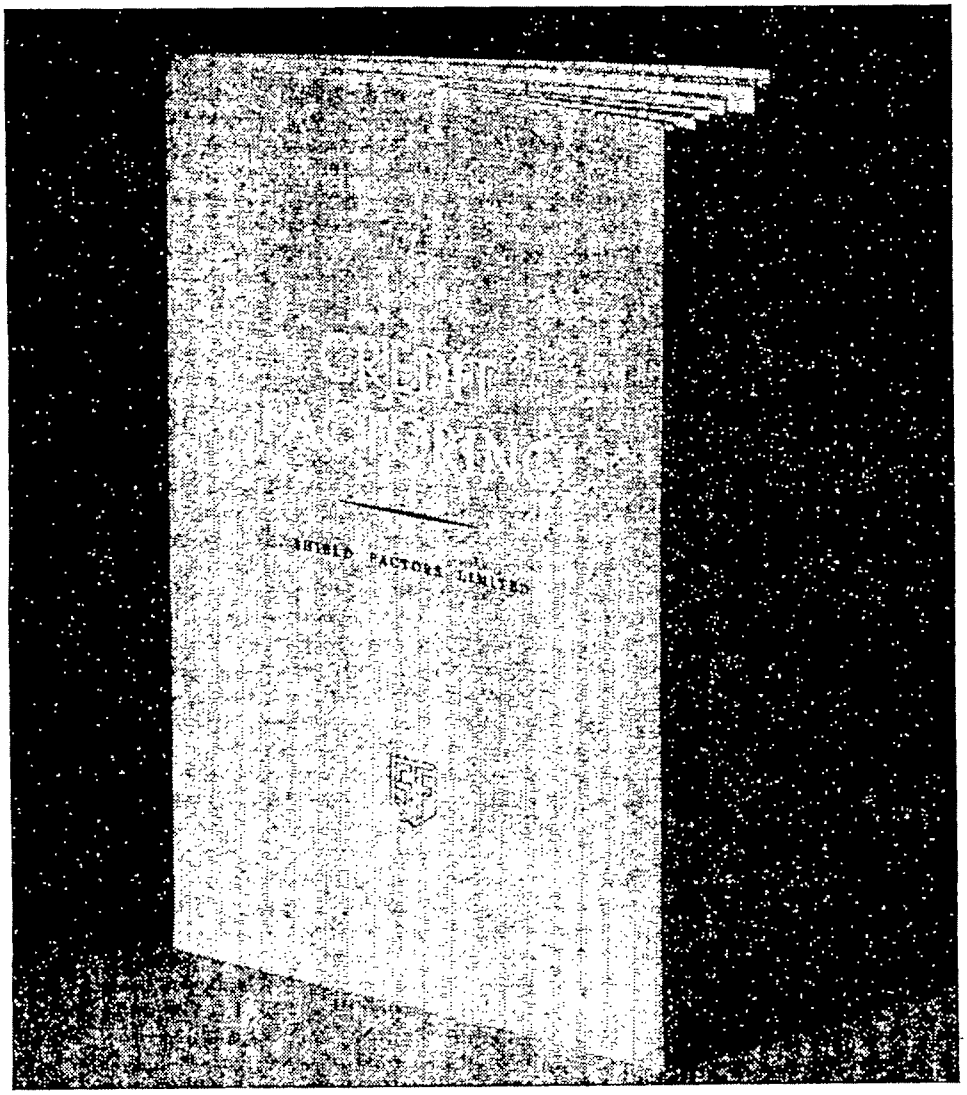
Training for Accountants

24. We have said earlier in this memorandum that we think recruitment will be made easier if potential entrants can be offered systematic training facilities. We now turn to a more detailed consideration of the facilities which should be available.

25. All trainee accountants should be able to attend full-time courses and should positively be encouraged and expected to do so. Continuation of training should, of course, be dependent on satisfactory progress.

26. Courses should be regulated and co-ordinated so that, without stultifying the freedom of teachers, they work to a fairly uniform curriculum and are established in accordance with needs in the different areas.

27. The release of staff to attend training courses presents a problem for the smaller authorities, and we think that the solution to this lies in the acceptance by local government as a whole of a greater measure of responsibility for training. It should be practicable to devise a scheme under which the larger authorities provide training facilities, the cost of which might be met on a 'pooling' basis. It should not be forgotten that local government at present bears a proportion of the cost of training for professions and vocations outside local government.



28. It is an important part of the training of an accountant that he obtains a wide and balanced range of experience during his pre-qualification years, and his academic studies need to be related to practical work. There is need, therefore, to ensure that the office training of the accountant is carried out in an organized manner. This, of course, is partly a matter for the Institute itself to determine, but if any scheme is to be effective it needs the support of local government to deal with the problem of smaller authorities, and to provide the necessary authority to ensure compliance. To provide adequate training on some subjects, trainees may need to be seconded to another type of authority for short periods.

29. Action on these lines is desirable as an aid to recruitment of new staff, who will thus be able to see that organized training is regarded in local government as a normal part of employment, as it is in other spheres, but it is also important because:

(a) It will assist in securing the retention of the higher calibre entrant.
(b) At present the average age on qualification is too high.

Training for Management

30. If local government is to make the most effective use of the quality of staff which we hope will be recruited in future, the need to provide post-qualification training needs to be fully recognized. Training in management subjects, as evidenced by the recent decision to establish facilities for commercial and industrial management training in London and Manchester, is especially important.

CONTRACT DEPRECIATION

for Accurate prediction of transport costs

Contract Depreciation offers a simple, practical and economical way of operating your company's transport fleet at an accurately predictable cost level. You obtain a much clearer picture of your fleet's profitability ...tender for contracts more competitively...and reduce dramatically your unproductive administrative time.

There are numerous other worthwhile advantages of CD:—

- You get all the tax reliefs, including investment allowance
- Tailor-made contracts—fewer idle trucks or part loads
- Your fleet has higher profit-earning potential due to greater availability
- Early, automatic vehicle replacement before heavy overhaul and repair bills become due—and you get a new vehicle every time
- Reduced repairs and maintenance necessitates fewer skilled and scarce mechanics, and smaller workshop accommodation
- Established over 15 years to ensure continuous service and the availability of trucks to meet all your requirements

To do this, the Institute considers that it is necessary to correct the appearance of decline, and to develop a sense of direction for local government as a whole expressed in the form of a statement of intention and commitments.

RELATIONS WITH THE PUBLIC – THE 'IMAGE' OF LOCAL GOVERNMENT

21. There is little doubt that the general impression which the public has of local government is not good enough and does not reflect fairly on the interest and opportunities which service in local government has to offer. Local government must take radical and positive measures to improve its public relations if it is to attract members and officers of the top calibre.

22. So many of the services performed by local authorities are very personal, and the contact between the local authority and the people often occurs when they are under stress – for example, with health, welfare and housing problems. In many of the personal contacts, the local authority possesses powers of decision which have an extremely important effect on the future life of the individuals concerned, e.g. planning applications, compulsory purchase, applications for licences and bye-law applications. In these circumstances, people are unavoidably highly sensitive to the manner in which their particular problems are treated, and therefore the responsibility for improving public relations in local government must be shared and felt by every person in the local government service. It is not something which can be satisfied solely by the appointment of a Public Relations Officer or by good relations with the Press, and other bodies on all matters of general public importance, desirable though these are.

Influences on the 'Image' of Local Government

23. There are a number of special features which contribute to the image of local government. Most of them are inherent in the system of democratic local government and, indeed, some of them are virtues of the system. Local government is not comparable to large organizations in the private sector. Such organizations are not open to the detailed public criticism and spend substantial sums of money either by direct advertising or other means to maintain a favourable image. This is all the more reason, therefore, why local government needs to take especial care in its public relations.

24. What is discussed in the local council meeting which make the headlines in the local Press, and what is so published, and particularly the manner of publication, has a material influence on public opinion.

25. Many decisions of management involve a degree of risk. This is inevitable if progress is to be made. It follows that some decisions will later prove to have been wrong. Local authorities should publicize examples where enterprise has been successful as the most effective means of putting errors into perspective.

26. However successfully local government improves its approach to public relations, the image of local government will continue to be mainly dependent on the substance and manner of public criticism of the actions of local authorities, by the Press, political parties, other organizations and individuals. A careful watch on abuses of public authority and on the standards of public service and conduct are essential safeguards, but the Press, political parties, other organizations or individuals who regard it as their public duty to criticize local authorities have, by the same token, a duty to the public to be constructive as well as destructive, to be fair in their criticism and the way in which it is presented, and to ensure that criticisms are put in the perspective of the work of the local authority as a whole. If criticism is continuously destructive and presented in a biased fashion, the public will be given a distorted impression of the work of the local authority.

Differences between Private Organizations and Local Authorities

27. The Institute draws attention to some of the differences between local government and other organizations in the private sector:

28. Local authorities are publicly accountable for their actions. Local authorities are therefore subject to extensive and open public criticism, and the image of local government is affected by the substance of the criticism and, probably more important, by the manner in which it is made and in which it is answered.

29. Decisions are made by local authorities by accepted democratic processes which takes time and slows down the process of decision-making, and this is reflected in the image of local government.

30. It is difficult for people to relate the pace of development of services to what can be afforded. The process of financing local authority services is necessarily complex, and if the pace of development of a service or services is not as fast as many desire, it is inevitable that this should appear to reflect on the ability of the local authority to get things done.

31. Reference has already been made to the complexity of the relationship between Central and local government which, again, must give the public a blurred impression of what local authorities are responsible for.

The following are some specific matters to which attention is drawn:

Council meetings

32. The manner in which the business at many council meetings is conducted needs to be improved.

Responsibility of chief officers

33. Chief officers should be expected to take a positive role in public relations, and the arrangements made should be clearly defined.

Staff responsibility for public relations

34. The responsibility of everyone in local government for public relations needs to be made clearer and encouraged in the following ways:

(i) the example from the top by the approach to public relations by members and chief officers;

(ii) by direct and skilled advice on public relations as part of the basic staff training;

(iii) by periodic review of arrangements.

Skilled public relations

35. There should be more skilled co-ordination of public relations at national and local level.

Replies to criticisms

36. Very often replies to public criticisms are too late; are expressed in stilted language; and appear to be written with the object of giving the minimum amount of information necessary to contain the position. Whilst care needs to be taken in replying to criticisms, a much more positive approach needs to be adopted and encouraged.

Official notices

37. Official forms and official notices are often unduly legalistic and stilted in their wording, and are frequently more impersonal than is necessary.

Buildings

38. All too frequently local authority offices in which many members of the public are received are drab, forbidding and impersonal.

Reception of visitors

39. Arrangements for the reception and direction of people coming to a local authority office are often inadequate, inefficient and impersonal.

Democratic practices

40. Some procedures and arrangements are unduly complicated and slow because of the need to observe democratic practices. We would not presume to recommend encroachment on the basic democratic rights of people in relation to acts by local authorities but we think that sometimes provision in procedures for people to exercise their democratic rights could be made more efficient and effective, and that this would improve the image of local government.

Case studies

41. We think that it would be helpful if a case study of a range of public notices, forms and Press releases were undertaken, and alternative examples prepared.

MANAGEMENT

42. The third, and probably the most important, factor in attracting and retaining members and senior officers of high calibre is that local authorities need to be constituted and organized in accordance with modern concepts of management.

43. We consider that the constitution and organization of local authorities should be on the basis of elected representatives of the people being responsible for policy, and that authorities should take decisions on the basis of the advice of their professional and technical experts.

44. The main problem in considering the constitution and administrative organization of local authorities is the need to balance three functions:

(i) democratic responsibility of members;

(ii) the maintenance and efficient development of a wide range of services of different types and size;

(iii) the co-ordination necessary to carry out and develop this range of services in the name of the local authority.

45. In recent years there have been some marked changes in the administration of local government. First, public demand to expand certain major local authority services, e.g. education, and highways, has been in recent years very strong, and there has consequently been increasing emphasis on getting things done. Secondly, the techniques employed by the professional and technical officers have become much more sophisticated and specialized. Thirdly, as services have themselves developed, many of them have become increasingly interdependent (for example, the relationship between housing, welfare and children problems, the relationship between the planning functions of local authorities and other services, particularly highways). Finally, there has been the growth in management services and an increased emphasis on management techniques and aids (for example computers, operational research, works study and O. & M.).

Local authorities should be seen to be constituted to meet future needs in a manner which takes account of these trends and we make recommendations on this basis.

Size of Authority

46. Local authorities should be so constituted that they have resources and a range of services and responsibilities capable of attracting men and women of the requisite quality, and of achieving the necessary standard of efficiency in the services for which the local authorities are responsible.

Members

47. We believe that arrangements should not be directed at attracting members to local government from any particular class or section of society, but that members should be drawn from all sections of society. The qualities to be desired from members are that they are people of vision and judgement, who are interested in public service and who, by their variety of interests and experience, fairly reflect the views of the public. The senior officers would be responsible for providing the expert knowledge and for administering the services.

48. We consider that:

(i) in general, the number of members of a local authority should be reduced;

(ii) elections for councils should be held once every two years for half the council, and that the tenure of office of a councillor should be four years;

(iii) there should be an age limit for membership of the council.

It is recognized that this would operate arbitrarily, and its imposition would result in local government losing the services of some still able, alert and forward-looking members, but we believe that on balance the need to attract a higher proportion of younger members offsets this loss;

(iv) as a matter of good public relations, all employers in the private sector should be encouraged to give staff time and facilities to serve as members of local authorities and that the same encouragement and facilities be given to management and to staff;

(v) training arrangements should be made available to all new members of local authorities to give them the basic information of the functions, finance and administrative arrangements in their local authority. This training should not be aimed at making members experts in any particular field, but in giving them the basic information which members now need in order to meet their responsibilities to the public;

(vi) members of special ability need to be given earlier opportunity to be chairmen of committees, and this could be achieved by limiting the tenure of office;

(vii) members should be paid expenses and reimbursed loss of earnings on an adequate rather than a minimum scale.

Members – Policy Making

49. Councils in their present form are too large and in other ways unsuitable bodies for originating policy. In many authorities the finance committee is in practice the body which considers and co-ordinates policy matters, and there are good reasons why this is so. Finance is the common thread running through the administration of all the services, and is with few exceptions an important consideration in major policy matters. The finance committee is independent of the executive services, is responsible for co-ordinating the finances of all services, and for these reasons is invariably a powerful committee.

50. In some authorities a party political nucleus determines its main policy at meetings outside the council's constitutional organization. In other authorities, where party politics may not play a dominant part, an inner circle often considers policy in a similar manner. The present position, therefore, is that in many authorities these small influential groups frequently reach decisions without having heard and considered the advice of their professional advisers at first hand. We think that arrangements should be made to bring these groups into the formal constitution of local authorities.

51. We consider that this can best be achieved by formally recognizing the practice of making the finance committee the policy committee of the council.

52. In making this recommendation, we recognize that although finance is frequently a dominant consideration, this is not always the case, but the finance committee's independence, its strength and its co-ordinating functions fit it for this role. We think that the case for the finance committee being the policy committee is stronger than the case for establishing a policy committee additional to and separate from the finance committee.

53. Whatever the arrangements made, we consider that there are two fundamental principles which should be observed:

(i) that a strong finance committee, independent of other services, should be responsible direct to the council for financial administration and for advising on the financial implications of all proposals;

(ii) that the treasurer's independent function should be maintained, and he should continue to have access to whatever body is responsible for deciding policy, and should continue to give to that body financial advice and information free from undue influence or bias.

54. There are a number of alternative relationships which this policy committee could have to the council as a whole. Whatever these relationships are, the aim must be that the policy committee enjoys the general confidence of the council, and the constitution should ensure that changes in the membership in this policy committee are made so that this relationship is maintained.

Members – Administration of Services

55. We think that the committee system of local authorities needs radical alteration. Many committees are too large and often sit for too long a time. The distinction between policy, which should be the concern of the committee, and administration, which should be the concern of the chief officer, is not maintained, and too much committee time is taken up on administrative detail. Chief officers themselves are partially to blame for this. Frequently they seek to cover their responsibilities with a protective cloak of committee resolutions. Inevitably, a disproportionate amount of the time and attention of many chief and senior officers is given to attending committees, and much of this time could be better spent in improving the administration of the services themselves.

56. If the need for a policy-making body is accepted and if it is agreed that chief officers should be responsible for administering services, the position of the present committee structure would need careful thought. There are some policy matters which would not justify the time of the policy committee; there is the need to provide machinery to consider individual cases (for example, major planning applications) in which the degree of public interest is high or which members consider justify raising in committee. For these reasons, and because of the variety and range of types of local authority services, it is considered that a carefully planned committee structure is a necessity.

57. We think that the number of committees should be reduced. For this purpose, it would be appropriate in some cases for one committee to be responsible for a range of services.

58. Although we recognize the difficulties, we think that the preparation of an advisory code illustrating the distinction between policy and administration should be considered on a range of subjects where this is possible.

59. The relationship between service committees, the policy committee and the council would need to be determined. In broad outline, main recommendations of service committees on matters of major policy should in the Institute's view be referred to the policy committee. It would, however, be an important part of the policy committee's responsibilities to ensure that the policies of different committees and services are co-ordinated, and to stimulate service committees with new ideas. It should not operate simply as a sieve.

Officers – Pay

60. Some of the changes necessary to attract senior officers of high calibre to local government may be taken either directly or by inference from previous sections of this evidence. These include more efficient organization of the local authority structure; firm responsibility to be placed on the chief officer for administration of services; and improvement in public relations.

61. We note that the committee will not be concerned with the pay of staff, and the Institute itself is, as has already been stated, precluded by its Royal Charter from seeking the pecuniary gain of its members. Obviously, however, the pay, conditions and career prospects of senior local government staff are the most important influences on the future calibre of the staff, and any recommendation about the attraction in the future of local government to senior staff would be incomplete without a reference to this. In the past there were two outstanding attractions to the local government service compared to service in many other organizations. These were security and pensions. They are no longer dominant attractions.

62. One principle which appears to be used in deciding the pay of persons in the public sector is the pay of persons occupying what are judged to be comparable posts in the private sector. Because public money is involved, an attitude may be taken or inferred that pay and conditions of services for persons in the public sector should be varied, if a variation is justified, by changes to pay and conditions of comparable posts in the private sector. Such a policy takes no account of the difference in attraction between service in a local authority and service in other organizations and, if rigidly applied, would result in the conditions of pay and service in the local government service being one step behind that of other organizations.

63. We think that it would be desirable that the principles upon which the pay and conditions of senior staff should be determined were formulated and made public.

Officers – Superannuation

64. We consider that superannuation legislation should be amended so that senior officers leaving the public service do not lose accrued pension rights.

Officers – Employer/employee relationship

65. Some prospective senior officers of high calibre may be deterred from considering employment in the local authority service for the following reasons:

the risk of public discussion of salary, conditions of service and other personal matters; the belief that their employment and advancement may be dependent not upon their ability but upon whether their advice is likely to be acceptable to the council.

66. The local government service as a whole has an extremely good record in the respect and dignity with which staff are treated, but these two matters are clearly ones upon which prospective senior staff may be particularly sensitive.

The Treasurer

67. There are two basic principles which in the Institute's view together form the keystone of sound financial practice in the local government service. These are:

(i) the independence of the treasurer in carrying out the treasury function;

(ii) the right and duty of the treasurer to report direct and to give financial advice to those responsible for taking decisions (whether members or officers) on the financial implications of any proposal.

68. The treasurer must continue to be independent of all other chief officers if he is to be free to do his duty in respect of the treasury function, whether it is popular or not. He should be independent of all bias if he is to give and to be seen to give impartial financial advice. He must continue to be independent in the exercise of his legal and professional obligations as trustee of public funds.

69. By the same token, the right of the treasurer to report direct on financial implications is a well-established principle, and it is his duty to give impartial financial advice and information direct to whoever is responsible for taking a decision which has financial implications.

70. We have registered these principles in the evidence because of the importance we attach to them and because we consider that these two features represent fundamental principles which it is essential to maintain, whatever changes occur in the future.

71. We are of the opinion that every local authority should appoint a full-time treasurer who should also be chief financial officer. The present legal position is that the clerk and treasurer shall not be one and the same person, and we consider that this principle should be upheld and that whatever changes are recommended, the office of treasurer should continue to be separate from and independent of any other office. We also recommend that the treasurer should have the same security of office as at present applies to the Clerk of the County Council under section 100 of the Local Government Act, 1933.

Co-ordination of Services

72. We consider that the efficiency of local authorities has become increasingly dependent on the success of the co-ordination of the various services.

73. The structure of local authority departments at the present time could be analysed as follows:

Executive departments those departments which are responsible for the performance of particular services – education, health, fire, etc.

Service departments those departments which provide specialist services for the executive departments, for example, architect's, works, etc.

Co-ordinating departments those departments responsible for co-ordinating the administrative and financial work of the local authority as a whole – these are the Clerk's and the Chief Financial Officer's departments.

74. We therefore consider the roles of the two main co-ordinating departments and the relationship between the council and the chief officers of those departments.

75. In general terms, the clerk of the council is How 'instant' is instant photocopying?

The Roneo STREAMLINER Photocopier gives perfect copies of any document in a matter of seconds.
Swift, simple—always ready to operate. Stands neatly on your desk. Costs little to run. For bigger jobs, the STREAMLINER MAJOR gives up to Brief size (double foolscap) copies just as quickly, economically, from any original of any colour.
Both Photocopiers incorporate the unique Streamliner instant dry cartridge loading system. Need a new cartridge? Fit one in seconds. primus inter pares of all chief officers, and, in this role, plays an important part in co-ordinating services. The clerk has no general executive powers over other chief officers; he is generally accepted as being responsible for initiating consideration of changes and also for making recommendations to council and to committees on matters affecting the general administration and constitution of the local authority. He is also responsible for legal, administrative and ceremonial work and advice.

76. The chief financial officer is financial adviser to the council, committees and departments; accountant responsible for the provision and interpretation of management accounting information at all levels; paymaster and receiver; and is responsible for financial administration throughout the authority. Finance is reflected in all transactions of a local authority and financial administration and procedures form one of the major co-ordinating influences. The treasurer has a statutory duty to supervise the arrangements for all receipts and payments (section 58 of Local Government Act, 1958). He has no general executive powers over other chief officers.

77. Co-ordination and common standards are achieved in a number of other ways, for example:

Common Practices
- financial regulations;
- accounting routines;
- establishment control.

Co-ordination
- revenue and capital budgets;
- capital programmes.

Common Services
- data processing, using in larger authorities, electronic computers;
- other services;
  - central purchasing;
  - O. & M. etc.

78. We believe that there are serious disadvantages in making one person (a general manager or a city manager) responsible for all local authority services and in making all other chief officers subordinate to him. We do not consider that either the clerk or the chief financial officer should be placed in an executive position over other chief officers.

79. As regards policy, if the executive powers of the manager over other chief officers are expressed in general terms, we think that it will be difficult, if not impossible, to draw the line between the functions of the policy-making body within the council, and the manager.

80. As regards administration, we see a difficulty of the same order of importance if an attempt is made to frame executive powers of the manager with the object of specifically excluding policy from those powers. In this latter event, there would be the added difficulty that the many chief officers of the various services would have a continuous problem in defining to whom they were ultimately responsible. Furthermore, we think that the wide range and type of services carried out by local authorities makes it unwise to place general responsibility for their day-to-day administration in the hands of one person.

81. Although, therefore, we consider that the concept of a city manager to whom all chief officers are responsible is inconsistent with democratic local government in this country, we nevertheless consider that changes should be made in the organization of local authorities to improve co-ordination.

82. We consider that:

(i) as regards policy, co-ordination of the work of a local authority should be one of the main responsibilities of the policy committee whose functions and place in the constitution of the local authority we have previously outlined;

(ii) emphasis of the role of the clerk in recent years should be recognized by a change of title to 'Chief Administrative Officer'. We consider that selection for the post of chief administrative officer should be open to appropriately qualified persons in local authorities and also outside local government. We think that the chief administrative officer should be sufficiently detached from the day-to-day administration of the local authority to take a broad view of its activities. He should accordingly be free of normal departmental responsibilities, such as legal advice and work, and administration of management services, etc. He should, however, act as secretary to the local authority;

(iii) as regards the future role of a chief financial officer in co-ordinating services, the financial administration of a local authority and the financial routines throughout the authority represent a major part of the day-to-day administrative work of a local authority, and together with the systems of accounting, costing, budgetary and establishment control, are the most important instruments for co-ordinating administration. Taking account of the influences of electronic data processing in the future, it is clear that in many local authorities the financial procedures will increasingly be integrated as one whole so that the basic information relating to employees, services, and materials, can automatically be taken into account in all those accounts, records and statistics upon which they have an effect. The financial and associated routines will form the core of the local authority's financial, management, establishment and statistical data and records, and we consider that changes in the co-ordinating role of the chief financial officer lie in developing this integrated service and in providing other management services;

(iv) it is becoming increasingly recognized by many chief officers that in meeting the major problems facing local authorities in the future (for example, planning, re-development, traffic, housing, personal services and provision for leisure) professions will become more interdependent upon each other's services, and team work will be an essential feature.

Conclusion

83. If the committee think it helpful, we should be happy to appoint representatives to give oral evidence, and to assist the committee in its work in any other way they think useful.

THE INSTITUTE OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS IN ENGLAND AND WALES

SPECIAL AND ORDINARY MEETINGS OF THE COUNCIL

At special and ordinary meetings of the Council held on Wednesday, February 3rd, 1965, there were present:

Mr W. Guy Densem, President, in the chair; Mr Robert McNeil, Vice-President; Messrs J. Ainsworth, C.B.E., J. F. Allan, G. R. Appleyard, W. L. Barrows, T. A. Hamilton Baynes, J. H. Bell, C. J. M. Bennett, Sir Henry Benson, C.B.E., Sir William Carrington, Messrs G. T. E. Chamberlain, D. A. Clarke, C. Croxton-Smith, E. Hay Davison, S. Dixon, J. V. Eastwood, W. W. Fea, Sir Harold Gillett, Bt, M.C., Messrs J. Godfrey, G. G. G. Goult, L. C. Hawkins, C.B.E., J. S. Heaton, J. A. Jackson, R. O. A. Keel, Sir William Lawson, C.B.E., Messrs R. G. Leach, C.B.E., R. B. Leech, M.B.E., T.D., E. N. Macdonald, D.F.C., R. P. Matthews, D. S. Morpeth, W. Bertram Nelson, C.B.E., W. E. Parker, C.B.E., S. J. Pears, F. E. Price, Sir Thomas Robson, M.B.E., Messrs J. D. Russell, R. G. Slack, D. Steele, A. G. Thomas, A. H. Walton, R. Walton, F. J. Weeks, E. F. G. Whinney, J. C. Montgomery Williams, R. P. Winter, C.B.E., M.C., T.D., E. K. Wright.

Sir Winston Churchill

The President informed the Council that he had been present in St Paul's Cathedral on January 30th, 1965, for the State funeral service of the late Sir Winston Churchill.

Election to the Council

Mr Robert Walker Cox, F.C.A., Nottingham, was elected a member of the Council to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr Paul Francis Granger, F.C.A.

Appointment to Committees

Mr R. W. Cox, F.C.A., was appointed to serve on the District Societies Committee.

It was reported that Mr D. F. Pratten, F.C.A., had been appointed to serve as a co-opted member of the Examination Committee.

Statements on auditing: Auditors' reports on group accounts

The Council approved a statement on auditing, No. 5, Auditors reports on group accounts, for publication and circulation to members. The document will be circulated to members with the next supplement to the Members' Handbook as section U5. The date and price of publication for sale will be announced in due course[1].

British Medical Association

The Council approved the following statement for publication:

'The Council received an inquiry from the British Medical Association as to whether, by forming a small department manned by its own staff to extend the present practice of giving general advice on accountancy and taxation problems to its members when required, the British Medical Association would be transgressing the ethics and practice of a sister profession.

'Since the inquiry raised issues affecting the accountancy profession as a whole, the Council consulted The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland, The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland and The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants.

'The Council has informed the British Medical Association that there would be no professional objection to the proposed advisory service so long as it does not include the preparation of practice accounts or individual negotiations on taxation matters on behalf of members of the British Medical Association. Assurances on both these points have been received from the British Medical Association.'

U.E.C.

It was reported that Sir Thomas Robson, accompanied by Mr P. Carrel (Under-Secretary), had attended a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Union Européenne des Experts Comptables in Brussels on January 23rd, 1965.

Institute Auditors

The Council received with regret notice of the death of Mr Leonard Walter Bingham, F.C.A., one of the Institute's auditors since 1955. It was decided that the vacancy in the office of auditor be filled by the appointment of Mr Bernard William Rivett, F.C.A.

University of Bristol

It was reported that Mr C. Croxton-Smith, M.A., LL.B., F.C.A., had been reappointed as the Institute's representative on the Court of the University of Bristol for a further term.

Examination Results – November 1964

It was reported that the results of the examinations held in November 1964 were as follows:

	Passed	Failed	Total
Old Intermediate	297	313	610
Old Final	948	1,145	2,093
	1,245	1,458	2,703

[The names of the successful candidates and the recipients of prizes and certificates of merit were published in last weeks issue of The Accountant].

Articles and Examinations

It was reported that the following applications under various bye-laws relating to articles and examinations had been granted or refused during the six months ended December 31st, 1964.

	Granted	Refused
Bye-law 48: Permission to take an articled clerk for the first time	288	0
Bye-law 50: Additional articled clerks	7	0
Bye-law 52 (c): Granting of a Preliminary certificate by virtue of age and experience	26	1
Bye-law 64 (a): Reduction in period of service under articles – overseas graduates	55	4
Bye-law 64 (b): Reduction in service under articles	35	2
Bye-law 66: Permission to follow another business or occupation while under articles to the limited extent specified in the application	13	0

[1] Meanwhile, the statement is reproduced on page 187 et seq of this issue.

	Granted	Refused
Bye-law 67 (b) (iv): Permission to spend up to six months in an industrial, commercial or other suitable organization during articled service	15	2
Bye-law 67 (b) (v): Permission to spend up to six months on secondment to another member in practice in the United Kingdom	1	0
Bye-law 84 (a): Permission to sit the Intermediate examination earlier than normally eligible	7	0
Former bye-law 86 (a): Permission to sit the 'old' Final examination, after completion of articled service, earlier than normally eligible	48	0
Bye-law 88 (b): Exemption from the Intermediate examination	16	12

Registration of Articles

The Secretary reported the registration of 196 articles of clerkship during December, the total number since January 1st, 1964, being 3,511.

The P. D. Leake Trust

The Council approved for publication the accounts of the P. D. Leake Trust for the year to October 31st, 1964, a report on the administration of the trust and a report of the P. D. Leake Committee. A booklet containing these reports and accounts may be obtained without charge on application to the offices of the Institute by any interested person.

Admission to Membership

The following was admitted to membership of the Institute:

FINDINGS AND DECISIONS OF THE DISCIPLINARY COMMITTEE

Findings and Decisions of the Disciplinary Committee of the Council of the Institute at hearings held on January 6th, 1965

A formal complaint was preferred by the Investigation Committee of the Council of the Institute to the Disciplinary Committee of the Council that John Hawkins Ewing, F.C.A., was on October 6th, 1964, at the Marlborough Street Magistrates' Court convicted of three charges of stealing the respective sums of £492 15*s*, £445 and £200 from his employer and was sentenced to a total of nine months' imprisonment so as to render himself liable to exclusion or suspension from membership of the Institute. The Committee found that the formal complaint against John Hawkins Ewing, F.C.A., had been proved and the Committee ordered that John Hawkins Ewing, F.C.A., of 5 Eastbourne Terrace, Seaford, Sussex, be excluded from membership of the Institute.

A formal complaint was preferred by the Investigation Committee of the Council of the Institute to the Disciplinary Committee of the Council that Patrick Duffield McDermott, F.C.A., was convicted at the Central Criminal Court in the Old Bailey in the City of London on September 8th, 1964, on indictment for that he with intent to defraud and to the prejudice of Her Majesty the Queen and the Commissioners of Inland Revenue made a false statement in a claim for allowances for income tax (six offences) so as to render himself liable to exclusion or suspension from membership of the Institute. The Committee found that the formal complaint against Patrick Duffield McDermott, F.C.A., had been proved and the Committee, having regard to special mitigating circumstances, ordered that Patrick Duffield McDermott, F.C.A., of 23 Lawrence Lane, Cheapside, London EC2, be suspended for a period of one year from membership of the Institute.

QUOTATION REQUIREMENTS

Stock Exchange Notice

The Council of the London Stock Exchange are concerned at cases in which accountants reporting in respect of acquisitions have been unable to report on profits and net assets of the businesses or companies acquired without qualification because of the absence for one reason or another of adequate records in regard to stock-in-trade and work in progress.

In future, therefore, before deciding to grant or maintain a quotation the Council have stated that they reserve the right to require that the approval of shareholders in general meeting be sought to any acquisition where the accountants' report is so qualified, and will require this procedure in all cases in which it appears to the Council that the reporting accountants have been unable sufficiently to corroborate the amount of the net assets at the last balance sheet date or the amount and trend of profits over an appropriate number of years.

SHIPBUILDING INQUIRY COMMITTEE

It was announced last week by the President of the Board of Trade that Mr Reay Geddes, O.B.E., managing director of the Dunlop Rubber Co Ltd, is to serve as chairman of the Committee of Inquiry into the Shipbuilding Industry. The terms of reference of the committee will be:

(a) to establish what changes are necessary in organization, in the methods of production, and any other factors affecting costs to make the shipbuilding industry competitive in world markets;
(b) to establish what changes in organization and methods of production would reduce costs of manufacture of large main engines of ships to the lowest level; and
(c) to recommend what action should be taken by employers, trade unions, and Government, to bring about these changes.

The committee will be concerned with shipyards regularly building vessels of 5,000 gross tons and above (or naval vessels of equivalent value), but will also be able to consider the implications of their investigations for shipyards building sea-going vessels of lower tonnage. The Committee will also be concerned with the manufacture of steam turbines and slow-running diesels normally installed in ships of 5,000 gross tons and above (or naval vessels of equivalent value).

IN PARLIAMENT

P.A.Y.E. Tax Collection: Mechanized Accounting Systems

MR DALYELL asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he hopes to introduce a mechanized accounting system for collection of Pay As You Earn in Scotland, the London area, the North of England, the Midlands and other convenient areas of the United Kingdom, respectively.

Mr MACDERMOT: A mechanized accounting system for collection of P.A.Y.E. tax will operate from April 1966, for employers in Scotland and the London area. Mechanized accounting will be extended to the rest of the country, but the dates have not yet been fixed.

Hansard, Feb. 8th, 1965. Written answers, col. 32.

£ Sterling: Purchasing Power

Sir J. BARLOW asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the official report a table showing the internal purchasing power of the £ sterling as 20*s* in 1914, and then the value in each year since in shillings and pence.

Mr MACDERMOT: The figures are given in the table below. They are based on movements in the cost of living index up to 1938 and on the consumer price index from 1938 to 1963, with a provisional figure for 1964 based on the index of retail prices. In view of the need to link different price series and of the considerable changes in the pattern of consumers' expenditure over this long period, the figures given should be regarded as giving only an approximate indication of the movements.

MANCHESTER SOCIETY OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

Residential Course for Final Students

The tenth residential revision course for final students to be arranged by the Education Committee of the Manchester Society of Chartered Accountants is to be held at Lyme Hall, near Disley, from March 29th to April 2nd.

The Committee considers itself fortunate in having

JOHN FOORD & COMPANY
56 VICTORIA STREET, LONDON, SWI Telephone: Victoria 2002 (3 lines)
REVALUATION OF ASSETS
WORKS, FACTORIES, PLANT & MACHINERY, Etc.

secured the services of two chartered accountants who are full-time lecturers at Manchester University; it is hoped that sufficient interest will be shown in the course to warrant the further development of this aspect of the relationship between the University and the Society, and to this end the fee has been reduced to £11 11s from the previous charge of £13 2s 6d. In addition to lectures covering those parts of the syllabus which appear to give students the most difficulty, a resident tutor will be available throughout the course to guide informal discussions which are encouraged whenever time permits.

To avoid disappointment, students wishing to attend the course should submit their applications as soon as possible; the closing date for applications is March 10th.

THE INSTITUTE OF INTERNAL AUDITORS

Manchester Chapter

The next meeting of the Manchester Chapter of The Institute of Internal Auditors will be held next Tuesday at 7 p.m., at the Minorca Hotel, Wallgate, Wigan, when Mr G. A. Reid, B.COM., A.A.C.C.A., chief systems planner, North Western Division, National Coal Board, will speak on 'Electronic data processing systems and control'. Further information regarding the activities of the Chapter may be obtained from the local secretary, Mr F. Atherton, National Coal Board, King Street West, Wigan.

HOUSING STATISTICS

The average rent of local authority houses for the year ended March 31st, 1964, was 26s a week although the actual rents charged to individual tenants ranged up to £7 13s 10d per week. This is shown in the fifteenth annual return on housing statistics for 1963–64 covering 1,097 authorities, published by The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants.

Local authorities manage 3,319,417 houses and their average expenditure per dwelling was £95 of which £66 15s was for debt charges, £16 18s for contributions to the repairs fund, and £7 12s for supervision and management. Total income per dwelling amounted to £96 18s of which 73·6 per cent came in the form of rents, 19 per cent from Exchequer subsidies and 6·5 per cent from rate subsidies. This compares with figures for the previous year of 72·5 per cent, 20 per cent and 6·7 per cent respectively. The subsidies represented an average of 9s 6d per week on each council house.

In the case of each type of authority, rents formed a greater proportion of total income than in the preceding year but ranged from 56·6 per cent of the total in the case of metropolitan boroughs to 77 per cent in the case of non-county boroughs. The statistics reveal a marked difference between London and the rest of the country. The average expenditure per dwelling in London was much higher than in the country as a whole (£146 2s) and so also were the average weekly rents charged (32s 4d). The average subsidy per dwelling in London worked out at 20s 4d per week.

Copies of the return are obtainable from The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants, 1 Buckingham Place, Westminster, London SW1, price 15s each.

BUSINESS EFFICIENCY EXHIBITION

Birmingham, May 17th–21st

Nearly eighty companies will be taking part in the fifty-fifth national Business Efficiency Exhibition to be held at Bingley Hall, Birmingham, from May 17th to 21st. Organized by the Business Equipment Trade Association, the many exhibits on display will include computers, office printing and accounting machines, dictating equipment, cash registers and filing systems.

INSTITUTE OF ACTUARIES

Use of Computers in Life Assurance Offices

Many life offices are in the course of introducing electronic computers into their head offices to assist in the routine work. In an essentially practical paper entitled 'Some changes in actuarial methods arising from the use of a small computer in a medium-sized office', read before a meeting of members of the Institute of Actuaries in London recently, Mr W. T. L. Barnard, F.I.A., showed that many actuarial calculations can be rearranged so that they are suitable for computer techniques, and that in a medium-sized life assurance office they can then be produced as a by-product of the routine processing of basic records on a small computer.

Making use of the fact that the functioning of a computer involves very simple logic, Mr Barnard illustrated that computations which would otherwise call for the use of complicated formulae could be produced quite readily by the computer without them. He also drew attention to the possible effects of the rapidly widening use of computers in life offices in the training of actuarial students. Mr Barnard described how the liability of a private pension fund may be calculated by a small computer and how, by a minor adjustment to the formula, the liability may be expressed as the amount of pension expected to be payable in each year in the future. This latter method, which is not normally used because of the amount of arithmetic involved, enables a comparison to be made between the pension outgo and the income from the assets at future dates.

You, the employer, want maximum efficiency seven hours a day from your staff, whether they number 1, or 1,000. So you offer pension and insurance schemes, incentive bonuses, etc. But there's an eighth hour in a working day — 60 minutes of lunch time, which could mean either eating or fasting to your employees. In the interests of recruiting and retaining the right staff, an added incentive has taken its important place beside the normal welfare schemes modern workers expect. LUNCHEON VOUCHERS — the difference between eating and fasting . . . between expense and investment.

Undoubtedly, your secretary would appreciate Luncheon Vouchers. In which case, she'll willingly send for this new brochure, 'Luncheon Vouchers and People.' People like her.

Developments in the P. L. A.

The Port of London Authority are planning extensive port developments, invoving expenditure in excess of £40 million over the next few years, and are using modern techniques to assist in this. At the same time modern management accounting is being rapidly developed throughout the Authority's undertaking to aid increased effectiveness. One third of the nation's trade passes through the Port of London: in addition to administering about ninety miles of river and estuary the P.L.A. own and operate the five large enclosed dock systems. With net assets at current prices of some £200 million, it is a major trading undertaking. The following new appointments represent opportunities to make an important contribution to these activities:

Economist/Statistician

Working under the Authority's Economist he will develop long and short-term forecasting, provide a general economic and statistical service – using modern techniques – for all departments and will carry out studies in development economics. An understanding of market research and experience of modern statistical methods are essential. Candidates, preferably aged 25 to 32, must hold a good honours degree in economics supported by commercial or research experience. Initial salary will be a matter for negotiation but will not be less than £2,000. Reference J.7322.

Assistant Management Accountant

Helping with the development of the most modern management accounting techniques throughout the Authority's undertaking, he will be concerned initially with the study and economic evaluation of all capital projects and the development of an advanced system of capital expenditure control. He will co-operate closely with the engineering, operating and commercial functions. Candidates, preferably aged 28 to 35, must be qualified accountants with an economic outlook who have experience of modern accounting procedure in large organizations, including capital accounting control processes. Initial salary will be a matter for negotiation but will not be less than £2,500. Reference J.7323.

These appointments carry permanent career prospects, progressive salaries and superannuation benefits. Pensionable service can, in certain circumstances, be transferred. Location: Trinity Square, EC3. – Please write, quoting the appropriate reference, to W. A. Griffiths, and stating how each requirement is met.

How we put paid to our growing pains before they'd even started

As the most progressive of the larger building societies, we're proud of our growth graph. In ten years our assets have more than trebled and the number of our accounts nearly doubled. But you can only grow so far at this pace before you start feeling the effects. Book-keepers become book-bound, typists become type-cast.

So we took a revolutionary step for a building society. We bought ourselves a computer. The fastest and most efficient in the country. It's left us with a whole new expanse of growing space. Just goes to show how progressive we are. Why trust your investment with anyone less? It deserves progressive thinking behind it.

NEWLY-QUALIFIED ACCOUNTANTS

It is generally accepted that on becoming a qualified accountant a move is not only desirable but an essential part of career planning. The inevitable question will arise as to where appropriate post-qualification experience can be acquired. As a result of many years' connection with the profession and commercial organizations, we are in a particularly favourable position to answer this question for you. Your career record and aspirations will be considered by one of our Directors and, in the light of our experience and knowledge, you will be advised as to where the right experience can be gained. Our service eliminates the necessity of replying to advertisements and box numbers which are frequently frustrating, time wasting and abortive. The element of risk in taking the 'wrong path' is eliminated. You are invited to telephone or write for an appointment for a

CAREER DISCUSSION

Our advice will be impartial, objective and confidential. No charge is made for this service and no obligation is incurred. Our reward is goodwill and recommendation which repays us a hundredfold.

THE POST OF THE WEEK

Those of us who have had experience of a 'Bed-Sit.' will be familiar with meters. However much we have cursed, or cursed the installer of the box with the ever-empty stomach, if you think further, many more important uses of this system can be, and have been, discovered by industry.

So much so that a major British group has its own industrial instrumentation company for which we have been asked to find an industrial accountant. The successful applicant will be qualified, in the age range 28–35, and will have had around five years' industrial experience. His position will be that of Chief Assistant to the Accountant, he will be based in SW. London and will control the financial, costing and budgetary functions. (A computer has recently been installed.) The opportunities for rapid advancement will be self evident. The commencing salary range will be £1,900–£2,500 p.a. and our clients expect to be able to appoint a man at some figure approaching the maximum.

Double Your Reading Speed?

A WELL-KNOWN publisher reports that there is a simple technique of rapid reading which enables you to double your reading speed and yet retain much more. Most people do not realize how much they could increase their pleasure, success and income by reading faster and more accurately.

Pages in seconds

According to this publisher, anyone, regardless of his present reading skill, can use this simple technique to improve his reading ability to a remarkable degree. Whether reading stories, books or technical matter, you can read sentences at a glance and entire pages in seconds with this method.

Free

To acquaint the readers of The Accountant with the easy-to-follow rules for developing rapid reading skill, the publishers have printed full details of their interesting self-training method in a new book, 'Adventures in Reading Improvement. It will be sent free to anyone who requests it. No obligation. Simply send your request to: Rapid Reading Programme (Dept A/BRI.), Marple, Cheshire. Enclose 3*d* stamp for postage.

Revenue Report

THE one hundred and seventh report of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, covering the year ended March 31st, 1964, has now been published[1]. The 212 pages of this familiar Blue Book are crammed with the usual absorbing statistics. Perhaps the most startling fact is in Table 32 on page 42, which shows for the ten years ending with 1963–64 the number of individuals having income over the effective exemption limit, the number of these who were entirely relieved from tax by their allowances, and the remainder. For 1962–63 the effective exemption limit was £180; for 1963–64 it was put at £275 to take account of the normal National Insurance allowance of £22. Thus, notwithstanding the general rise in incomes, the total number of individuals in the United Kingdom with incomes above the exemption limit fell in the year from 22,240,000 to 20,750,000. On the other hand, the total number entirely relieved by allowances went up from 2,050,000 to 3,250,000. The numbers chargeable with tax fell from 20,190,000 to 17,500,000. We have long advocated that the number of persons directly assessed should be reduced; if necessary by increasing indirect taxation. This fall of some three million people needing to be dealt with by the Inland Revenue must have saved untold amounts of unremunerative and pointless work, and made the 1963–64 increase in personal allowances well worth while.

Table 24 on pages 32–33 sets out details of the various standard rates, personal allowances, and reduced rates in each of the years 1952–53 to 1964–65 inclusive. Naturally the year 1964–65 itself plays no significant part in the report, but it shows that the extension of relief to people on small incomes, especially the aged, goes on.

Another startling aspect of the report emerges from the statistics of post-war credits. This system of crediting taxpayers with tax resulting from the reduction in personal allowances in 1941 was instituted with a view to sugaring the pill, on the footing that if the taxpayer survived the war he received his credit. Millions of these taxpayers must have been disappointed in this hope. By March 31st, 1964, some nineteen years after the end of the Second World War, little more than half of seventeen million original holders had been paid. The amount outstanding was then £249 million. This, of course, is measured in 1941 £s, but what the taxpayer will get is £s of 1965 or of 1966, each one less valuable than the preceding year's £. Since 1959 interest at 2½ per cent per annum compound has been added to unpaid credits. By March 31st, 1964, a total of nearly £7 million had been paid out in interest. However, the interest is not payable until the credit itself is paid. This was surely a cruel deception.

Sixteen pages of the report are devoted to an elaborate survey of personal incomes in 1962–63, which, however, is less elaborate than the quinquennial surveys for 1949–50, 1954–55, and 1959–60. Excluded from the survey is income which is specifically exempted, such as the first £15 interest from savings banks, and certain National Insurance benefits. The income shown is that assessed for 1962–63, so that where the basis of assessment is not the current year basis there could well be a considerable variation from actual income. The incomes covered are all those over £180 which were reviewed by the Inland Revenue for tax purposes for 1962–63. The sample taken covered about one hundred and twenty-five thousand cases in all. Some two hundred and twenty thousand cases, with an income of about £95 million, were probably missed. These include people on 'code cards', domestic servants, employees of farmers, and members of the Forces where there was no tax liability.

As in previous surveys, there was the usual deficiency in investment income returned, as compared with the total investment income. However, it was smaller than before, being about 1½ per cent. As before, a number of husbands failed to inform the Revenue that their wives were working – either from neglect, intention, or simply perhaps because they did not know anything about it. The figures in this respect were corrected by recourse to P.A.Y.E. statistics, with the exception of missing wives earning less than £3 15*s* a week. A married couple is treated as one person in the survey. The tables themselves are too detailed to be reproduced here, but they are extremely interesting. For instance, whereas there were 119,000 incomes before tax which exceeded £5,000 per annum, the number of incomes over £6,000 after tax was less than 17,000.

It is interesting to see that 12,000 people each had 'profits or professional earnings' under £200 in the year and that another 34,000 professional people and earners of profits failed to exceed £250. Only 9,100 admitted to £10,000 or more, out of a total number of persons of 1,620,200 in this category. More than 14,000 had salaries above £10,000.

For 1961–62 and onwards very considerable reliefs were given to surtax payers having earned income. Broadly speaking, the exemption limit moved up from around £2,000 to around £5,000, thus freeing the Special Commissioners from a vast volume of work. In 1961–62, before the new reliefs were felt, the net receipt rose from nearly £190 million to nearly £224 million. In 1962–63 it fell back to £183½ million, and by 1963–64 it was down to little over £179 million, despite rising incomes of which there is evidence everywhere. Even more startling is the fall in numbers of assessments. For 1960–61 the number of persons actually assessed to surtax was 465,000 and the tax £237 million. For 1961–62 only 280,000 persons were assessed, but this number had risen to 295,000 for 1962–63. It is to be hoped that the sweeping changes threatened for 1965–66 will not include a reduction in the surtax exemption limit. One wonders in any case where all the staff is to be recruited from.

Profits tax continues to rise in its total collection. The net receipt in 1963–64 was some £390 million, the estimate for 1964–65 is £415 million. The last figure strictly includes excess profits tax and excess profits levy, but the collections from these two discontinued taxes are negligible.

Appendix V of the report deals with companies and their operations in industry. Some interesting statistics for various industries are shown. However, the tobacco industry has been excluded 'because of the impossibility of presenting the analysis without betraying information concerning individual companies'.

The net receipt from estate duty (including small amounts of settlement estate duty) was £312,353,749 for the whole of Great Britain. Northern Ireland collects its own duty. The figure shown represents an increase of some £42 million on the previous year and is a record. This is perhaps not so much from an increase in real wealth as from a fall in the value of money. Another cause of the rise is the larger number of estates, both in England and Wales and in Scotland, which became liable to duty. Of a total of 316,013 estates in Great Britain, some sixty thousand exceeded £5,000. Two of them exceeded £2 million, and another eleven were over £1 million, including only one in Scotland.

The statistical branch of the Inland Revenue has also painstakingly compiled statistics of the estimated wealth of individuals in Great Britain in 1960, 1962 and 1963.

Four extra-statutory concessions have lapsed as a result of the abolition of Schedule A tax. There is a new profits tax concession dealing with intra-group payments of interest by overseas trade corporations, and four new income tax concessions reproduced elsewhere.

The Importance of Internal Control

MOST practising accountants, at some time or another, have had the frustrating experience of being told by a client or his staff that the books did not balance and that no attempt had been made to find the difference as the auditors would do so in the course of their checking. This situation, apart from devolving extra work upon the external auditor which should have been done by the client's staff, is most unsatisfactory. It creates a general lack of confidence in the records because, almost certainly, the arrangements for internal check are non-existent and those for internal control, if there are any, are probably suspect. Consequently, the auditor feels bound to carry out more exhaustive tests than he would normally consider necessary, thus upsetting the normal time schedule of the audit.

Co-operation between the external auditor and the client's staff is essential to an economically executed audit and managements, in the main, now recognize this fact. A large part of the credit must go to the accountancy profession itself which has encouraged the setting up of internal audit departments in large concerns and has suggested ways and means of establishing systems of internal control and internal checks in smaller ones. This has been done by direct contact with clients and, indirectly, through books, lectures and articles on the subject written by members of the profession. The latest of these is the new statement on auditing, with the title 'Internal control', recently issued by the Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales.[1] In view of the wide interest of this document to the profession at large, we are reproducing it in full elsewhere in this issue.

In its opening remarks, the Council makes three main points which should always be kept in mind. The first is that it is the directors or management of a company who are responsible for the conduct of an adequate system of internal control. Secondly, no system however efficient can automatically be proof against fraud by collusion, particularly when the participants themselves hold positions of trust and authority. Thirdly, the principle and practice of internal control may be extended beyond matters of finance and accounting to such functions as work study, operations research and production quality control.

The Council then goes on to consider the essential characteristics of a system of internal control which, again, are three in number. In the first place, there must be a plan of organization in which the company's operations are suitably divided and put in charge of persons of authority. The duties and responsibilities of these divisions, inter se, and in relation to the co-ordinating body consisting of the directors should be clearly established. Next, authorization, recording and custody procedures should be defined. The pattern of the allocation of duties should be such that each person's work is subject to the surveillance of at least two other persons. Thus, any irregularity in the interlocking chain should at once be detected. Lastly, the company's operations should be reviewed regularly by the directors through the medium of interim accounts, reports and summaries. Within this framework comes the internal audit department which, as well as checking and reporting regularly on routine matters, may be detailed to investigate specific problems thrown up by the information given to the directors by other departments.

The statement emphasizes, both in a section of the report on audit practice in relation to internal control and in an appendix on the field of relationship between the external auditor and the internal auditor, how important it is that the efforts of both parties should be aligned. Although the internal auditor is responsible to the management and the external auditor is responsible to the shareholders, they have a common interest in verifying that an efficient system of internal check is in force and that the accounting system is capable of producing fully adequate financial statements. Frequent consultation between them will help to determine how best their individual efforts may be directed.

Practising members will find the long appendix which deals with practical aspects of the subject both a useful amplification of the text of the statement and a challenge to the standards which they at present apply when assessing the strength and weaknesses of clients' systems.

Profitable Investment

A RECENT leading article in The Times drew attention to the confused and divergent opinions concerning the subject-matter to be taught in the new business schools. Last week a member of the English Institute was appointed Director-General of the new Confederation of British Industry. Too much should not be read into this coincidence of events, but in view of the numerous members of the various accountancy bodies who currently sit on the boards of companies, the importance of their professional skills to the effective conduct of British industry and trade should be beyond dispute.

Occasionally criticism is voiced on the one hand of the dominant position in British industry held by the accountant; and somewhat paradoxically on the other, that the profession has not kept abreast of recent developments. Even in such a responsible newspaper as The Times, a note in its City columns on the recent N.E.D.C. pamphlet, Investment Appraisal, was prefaced by a quite unfounded inference that this report constituted a criticism of accountants and their techniques.

In the circumstances, the publication by The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants this week of a new handbook, The Profitable Use of Capital in Industry,[1] is especially opportune. Its purpose is to set out 'those aspects of management accountancy which are directly concerned with the appraisal of capital investment projects and the planning and control of capital expenditure', and its appearance is proof of the fact that the profession fully recognizes the value and practice of modern techniques.

After a brief review of the nature and types of capital funds, touching on the issue of replacement cost, the study develops into an exposition of profit measurement in relation to capital employed; then follows an examination of the various methods of appraising prospective capital investments. It reviews the simpler and more popular methods, such as comparative costs over the working life of the asset, and the 'pay-back' technique where the capital cost is related to the annual addition to profits generated by the investment.

After examining other more sophisticated and 'scientific' methods of measuring the rate of return on the investment, the study concludes that 'the most serious drawback of all these methods is that they fail to take into account the incidence of income'. This omission can be rectified by the use of the discounted cash flow (D.C.F.) method which, as readers will be aware, takes account of the capital allowances (which are, of course, a form of 'pay-back') and the rate of interest which is forgone on the invested capital.

Methods of applying D.C.F., i.e. the rate of return and the present value method, are illustrated by several examples. Unlike the piece of 'crystal gazing' in the N.E.D.C. report referred to above, however, the illustrations are realistically based upon a five-year life, with scrap values and tax factors ignored. The principles underlying the methods having been clearly and succinctly expounded, the reader's attention is then drawn to the importance of adjusting these results for tax. As the authors put it, 'different projects may qualify for different tax allowances and, other things being equal, the scheme which attracts the lowest tax is the most advantageous'.

The real merit of this book, as compared with the N.E.D.C. report's treatment of D.C.F., is the two-page summary entitled 'Validity of estimates' in which the reliability of this method is cogently set out. This section – which is later supplemented by a clear analysis of the factors to be examined before making any large investment – is typical of the entire work. It is a realistic and sensible appraisal of methods which in certain circumstances are useful in so far as they enable a better guess to be made concerning the future than any other method. (After all, many of the schoolboys who toiled over compound interest would be amazed to learn that it now forms part of Britain's new economic armoury!)

A final section examines the basis for financial planning and budgeting, with particular reference to stock control and the need for retaining adequate working capital in any business, or especially one in the throes of rapid expansion. The book is supplemented by nine appendices of illustrative material on the methods discussed in the text, including tables for calculating the discounted return on investments and various rates of interest, and for assets of varying lengths of life.

While there is little in this book which the competent accountant who has read his professional journals regularly in the past will find new, even he, however, will find it a valuable addition to his bookshelf as an aide-mémoire and handy source of information. For those about to qualify, as well as those who have recently joined the qualified ranks of the profession, it is a work which will prove especially useful.

Most accountants – not least those in industry – will feel that this book should be made compulsory reading for all technical staff at managerial level. The latter would then, instead of attacking the 'short-sighted outlook' or 'parsimonious' attitude of the accountant or his 'lack of vision', begin to realize that investment appraisal is as necessary from its financial aspect as it is from the purely technical.

The I.C.W.A. is to be congratulated on producing this most useful work of reference.

Costing Defence Contracts

THE second report of the Lang Committee's two-part inquiry into the causes of the excessive profits made by Ferranti Ltd in respect of certain contracts for the supply of guided weapons and the implications of the whole affair for the Ministry of Aviation's pricing policy was published last week.[1] The results of the inquiry must now be judged on the basis of the recommendations.

Undoubtedly the first report – published last July and referred to in The Accountant of August 8th – was an excellent document which presented the facts. In all, the Ferranti company made a profit of £5,772,964 from its production work on the Bloodhound I missile and this profit represented 82 per cent on costs and 45 per cent on selling prices. Ferranti obtained this profit from a series of fixed price contracts which were based on the estimated total costs of production plus a profit margin, and the contracts were designed to provide fair and reasonable prices. With such non-competitive fixed price contracts the estimate for overhead costs is obtained by applying estimated direct labour costs to an overhead recovery rate. Ferranti's excessive profits largely arose from the fact that the estimates for direct labour costs were too high and this error was not confined solely to variable costs but was further magnified when estimated direct labour costs were applied to the overhead rate of 558 per cent. The first report criticized the Ministry of Aviation for the lack of effective collaboration between its technical costs and accountancy services. In addition, the Ferranti company was criticized for agreeing to prices '. . . which they knew were likely to yield profits that could not be regarded as fair and reasonable'.

Admirable though the initial report might have been, the second report which makes recommendations for the Ministry's pricing policy is somewhat less satisfactory. Few people can be satisfied with the Committee's conclusion that '. . . we have not been able to recommend any measures that would ensure that there could never be a repetition of what occurred in the pricing of guided weapon contracts that led to our appointment'. After all, it must be remembered that in the year ended March 31st, 1964, the Ministry of Aviation placed production contracts totalling £297·4 million, only about 6 per cent of which were subjected to competitive tender. Since non-competitive production contracts are usually on a fixed price basis, there remains considerable scope for future errors in the costing of such contracts.

The Lang Committee favours the continued use of fixed price contracts. The essential point about these contracts is that once they have been negotiated and both parties have agreed upon a fixed price, the Ministry has no further authority to examine a firm's costs. Thus, the contractor is allowed to retain the whole of any difference between actual and estimated costs and such savings take the form of incentive profits. It is also felt that fixed price contracts are more likely to lead to lower prices than 'cost plus' contracts. However, the Committee recognizes that fixed prices can only be fair and reasonable if they are based on reliable estimates of costs which assume efficient production. In order to avoid a situation where during the actual negotiation of the contract the firm may possess more cost information than the Ministry, the Committee recommends that until there is an agreed price, the Ministry should have 'equality of information' with its contractors. Although 'equality of information', with its ethical overtones, appears to be a relevant recommendation, it will be interesting to observe it in operation. Perhaps 'more' is a realistic substitute for 'equality of'?

A major problem which the Committee examined was the recovery of overheads via the application of direct labour costs to the overhead recovery rate. In order to reduce the overhead cost element in fixed price contracts and so reduce the overhead rate, it recommends that as much expenditure as possible should be charged direct to the contract. The Committee further suggests that the Ministry of Aviation should, as an experiment, estimate overheads separately in the form of an agreed annual payment and this would then avoid the 'multiplying error' which occurred in the Ferranti case. This suggestion would mean that the contractor would have some incentive to economize on overhead costs since he would be allowed to retain any savings from the agreed overhead sum. In general, the section of the report dealing with overheads appears to raise more problems than it solves, and it concludes with a general appeal for a combined inquiry by the Government and industry to examine various methods of recovering overhead costs.

Of course, if it was possible to re-negotiate contracts, then there would be no problem of firms earning excessive profits on defence work. Re-negotiation is not a revolutionary idea. The United States Government has statutory authority enabling it to re-negotiate a contractor's total earnings from Government defence contracts in any year. Apparently in the financial year 1959, the United States Re-negotiation Board determined 141 cases of excess profits, a number which included most of the major companies in the weapons business. During the year re-negotiation – including voluntary and informal settlements – amounted to over $270 million!

The Lang Committee considered re-negotiation but it felt that such a policy would reduce the incentive effect of fixed price contracts. Moreover, great importance was attached to the fact that '. . . a fixed price is an agreed price and that the sanctity of an agreed price should not lightly be disturbed'. But surely the possibility of earning excessive profits from public money provides a strong argument for disturbing this sanctity of the fixed price? One possible solution to this problem might be to retain the present system of fixed price contracts subject to the re-negotiation of profits after the contract had been completed. In the event of actual costs being below estimated costs, then such re-negotiations might aim to share the saving in the ratio, say, 4:1 between the Government and the contractor. Where actual costs exceeded estimates, the firm would suffer a loss. Such a pricing system would reward efficiency and, at the same time, there could be a maximum profit percentage on the capital employed, so that re-negotiation would prevent firms earning excessive profits.

Taxation of Benefits

by H. S. A. MACNAIR, F.C.A.

THE legislation introduced in 1948 with the declared intention of preventing the withdrawal of funds from companies in the guise of expenses was aimed primarily at directors. For this purpose 'directors' includes members of the board or a similar body, including a sole director or manager, or the members of the company if they themselves manage its affairs. If, however, such persons are accustomed to act in accordance with the directions or instructions of another person, not being a person who gives advice only in a professional capacity, then that person is included in the expression 'directors'.

The legislation also extends to '£2,000 all-in' employees, an expression coined here to mean the employees generally of a company (including managers) whose remuneration is dealt with under Schedule E and which amounts to at least £2,000 per annum – a figure to be computed on the footing that all returnable items which are the subject of this legislation are aggregated with basic emoluments without any deduction for expenses which may rank for relief under paragraph 7 of the Ninth Schedule to the Income Tax Act, 1952, or for professional fees and subscriptions (section 16 of the Finance Act, 1958). In this article both directors and '£2,000 all-in' employees will be comprehensively referred to as subordinates.

£2,000 Level

The arbitrary choice of the sum of £2,000 led the Royal Commission on Taxation which reported in 1955 to inquire into its background (Cmd 9474, paragraph 216). It appears that in 1948 this level of salary denoted that a man was 'highly paid' and the Revenue representative explained that this signified, in effect, that it represented the point above which an employer would begin to put himself out to attract an employee so that the provision of remuneration in the form of benefits in kind became a practical consideration.

Also, the circumstance that surtax in 1948 became payable in respect of income of £2,000 and above may have been an unconscious factor in the choice of that datum line. However, it would be a mistake to infer that subsequent modifications of the surtax starting-point are likely to be reflected in a raising of the benefits figure since, as the Royal Commission pointed out, the special legislation for subordinates only does for a few what ought in theory to be done for all.

Further points to note are that if more than one appointment is held with the same company, then all require to be aggregated in arriving at the limit; while a director may not treat any employments which he may hold from the company as being distinct from his directorship. For aggregation purposes moreover, directorships and employments with subsidiaries are not distinguished from appointments with the parent company which controls them. On the other hand, complete exemption is accorded to employments at a school or other educational establishment, despite a suggestion to the contrary by the Royal Commission (majority recommendation 10 (b)).

Again, the legislation has no application to a body established for charitable purposes only, or to the employees of a local authority (in general, a rate-levying authority) so far as not wholly or mainly employed in a trade which it carries on. Nor does it extend to companies which do not exercise the functions of an investment holding company or carry on a trade; here it is interesting to note that trade unions and trade associations are thereby exempted. However, the legislation does embrace, in their capacity of employers, both individuals and partnerships if they carry on any trade, profession or vocation, with appropriate extensions where there is a relevant subsidiary company. Subject to the general rule that no individual is to be treated in any circumstances as under the control of another person, the definition of control is taken from section 333 of the Income Tax Act, 1952.

Deemed Expenses

Where the employer incurs expense in, or in connection with, the provision for a subordinate or his spouse, family, servants, dependants or guests of

(1) living or other accommodation;
(2) entertainment;
(3) domestic or other services; and
(4) other benefits or facilities of whatsoever nature, then to the extent that the expense is not taxable under other legislation or made good to the employer by the subordinate, it is to be treated as if it had been incurred by the subordinate and refunded by his employer through the medium of a payment in respect of expenses.

Such 'deemed' expenses, as well as any actual sums paid, are to be treated as a perquisite of the appointment and included in assessable emoluments accordingly, subject to the set-off of any valid claims to relief.

The main problem arising from the legislation has been to determine its bounds, and in this context section 161 of the 1952 Act specifies various limits. Thus no liability arises in respect of meals in any canteen in which they are provided for the staff generally, while the expense of providing, for a subordinate or his spouse, children or dependants, any pension, annuity, lump sum, gratuity or other like benefit to be given on his death or retirement, is excluded.

On the other hand, the provision of such items as medical treatment is not exempted. Section 161 also excludes the expense of providing accommodation, supplies or services, e.g. typists or messengers, in any of the employer's business premises for the personal use of the subordinate and used by him solely in performing his duties.

A more controversial exclusion concerns expense in, or in connection with, the provision of living accommodation in any part of the business premises if the subordinate is, for the purpose of enabling him properly to perform his duties, required by the terms of his employment to reside in the accommodation and either (a) the accommodation is provided in accordance with a practice relevantly established more than twenty years before the 1948 starting-point of the legislation; or (b) it is necessary, in the case of trades of the class in question that subordinates of the class in question should reside on the relevant premises. This privilege does not extend to a director of the company or any associated company although by an extra-statutory concession the exemption is accorded in the case of a full-time director whose beneficial shareholding does not exceed 5 per cent of the ordinary share capital unless he also ranks as a '£2,000 all-in' employee.

These rules were considered in McKie v. Warner (40 A.T.C. 226; 40 T.C. 65), where an export sales supervisor with a family of four gave up his house and took a flat provided for him in central London by the employing company which paid the rent of £500 per annum to which he contributed £150. Part of his duties were to entertain and act as host to overseas buyers who were sometimes accommodated at the flat. However, the evidence did not establish that the occupation occurred in the course of carrying out the duties to a significant extent and in dismissing a Rule 7 claim put forward on the grounds of 'representative occupation', Plowman, J., distinguished the case where a man is employed to live on certain premises from that where he lives on the premises because he is employed.

It may be mentioned here that in practice the amount charged on an employee is normally restricted if the accommodation provided is a house which is patently old-fashioned and too large.

Concessions

Section 5 (1) of the Income Tax Act, 1952, entrusts the care and management of the income tax to the Board of Inland Revenue and it is understood that this is regarded as the source of their authority for granting so-called 'extra-statutory' concessions. One such concession is that no assessment is made in respect of removal expenses borne by the employer where the employee has to change his residence as a result of transfer to another post within the organization, provided that the expenses are reasonable in amount and their payment is properly controlled. 'Removal expenses' include such related items as a temporary subsistence allowance while the employee is looking for accommodation at the new station.

Again, travelling expenses are exempted in the case of a director in certain circumstances as follows:

(1) if he gives his services without remuneration to a company not managed with a view to dividends, e.g. a company owning a hall or sports ground or running a club;
(2) where a directorship is held as part of a professional practice in which the expenses are charged, if the reimbursements are brought into account, unless the practitioner relationship is merely incidental and there is some direct or indirect financial interest in the company; and
(3) to the extent of group travel away from the notional centre of the group, including for this purpose associated companies on which the group is represented because of its financial or investment interests.

An important limitation on the scope of 'deemed' expenses is set by the rule that any expense incurred by an employer in the acquisition or production of an asset which remains his own property is to be left out of account. This is illustrated by the case of Doyle v. Davison (41 A.T.C. 212; 40 T.C. 140), where the managing director paid to the company a rent equal to the Schedule A net annual value. (It may be noted in passing that Schedule A in this context has now been superseded by section 47 of the Finance Act, 1963.) However, the director's tenure of the premises was not subject to a written agreement and, in the absence of a covenant by the company as landlord to do repairs, the cost of these (amounting to £554 in two years) was assessed on the director as a benefit, although the inspector did not attempt to include certain items arising from dilapidations before acquisition of the property by the company.

The treatment of repairs received more stringent scrutiny in C.I.R. v. Luke (42 A.T.C. 21; 40 T.C. 630), where there was a formal repairing covenant by the company as landlord. By a majority the House of Lords held that the cost of making good prior dilapidations ranked as the production of an asset. An interesting suggestion in a minority opinion was that not every outlay by a company should be treated as capable of being deemed an expense, in particular, where no obvious benefit arises.

However, Luke's case was notable for an attempt to limit the scope of assessments in excess of a reasonable measure of the benefit of accommodation and in other circumstances it may be difficult to find grounds for a comparable restriction. Thus in Rendell v. Went (42 A.T.C. 255), the suggestion that a director in a car case might have incurred legal costs of the order of only a tenth of that actually paid by the company on his behalf did not prevent his being charged to tax on the greater sum. It was indicated that the possible limits in this direction would be considered if and when a situation arose where a company sought to foist an unreasonable benefit upon an unwilling director.

Valuation

When the nature of the expenses which require to be included has been identified, it remains to ascertain their value, with particular reference to amounts not covered by a Rule 7 claim. A transfer of the property in any asset of the employer which since its production or acquisition has been used by him or has depreciated is the occasion of a benefit equal to the value of the asset at the time of the transfer. Where, however, a retained asset is instrumental in providing a benefit, the deemed expense is equal to the value of the annual user or the rent or hire payable, whichever is the greater.

In 1961 the Revenue issued notes (Leaflet No. 480) setting out their views on a number of practical points. Thus with regard to benefit from the use of an employer's car, the measure adopted is the private proportion of an aggregate amount made up as follows:

(a) the annual value, normally taken to be one-eighth of the cost of the car when new or, if hired, the hire; and

(b) the running costs, including licence, insurance, petrol, oil, chauffeur's wages and repairs (whether serviced independently or from the employer's own resources).

The proportion is ascertained by reference to business and private mileage, travel between home and the ordinary place of work counting as private use, even where a car is made available for no other purpose.

Entertainment

On the question of entertaining, the Revenue view is that a deduction is admissible where a subordinate is required for genuine business reasons to entertain customers, suppliers or other business connections in the course of performing his duties. Thus the expenses of a particular occasion will normally be allowed if the purpose was to discuss a particular business project. They may also be allowable if the purpose was to maintain an existing business connection or to form a new one, even though no business was actually done.

No restriction is made for the benefit of the refreshment taken by the subordinate on allowable occasions but the expense of entertaining fellow-subordinates is considered allowable only in exceptional circumstances and 'reciprocal entertaining' between business acquaintances is the target of Revenue disapproval.

Position of a Wife

The position of a wife who accompanies her husband was considered in Maclean v. Trembath (35 A.T.C. 76; 36 T.C. 653), from which it appears important that the company should indicate by means of a directors' resolution or otherwise that she is required to perform functions on behalf of the company while other evidence of the commercial value of the operations which she undertakes may be called for.

The official notes state that an allowance for the wife's expenses may be admissible where she has some practical qualification directly associated with her husband's mission which she uses to assist him regularly during the tour, or where her presence is necessary to act as hostess at a series of business entertaining occasions which are an essential part of her mission. Her expenses may also be allowed where her husband's health is so poor that it would be unreasonable to expect him to travel alone.

Where, however, the part played by the wife is relatively unimportant (such as giving her husband occasional assistance with clerical duties or making the travel and hotel reservations) or the main reason for her journey is personal, then her expenses are liable to be disallowed in whole or in part.

A benefit may be deemed to arise where the records maintained for business purposes do not suffice to support a Rule 7 claim. In McLeish v. C.I.R. (37 A.T.C. 3; 38 T.C. 1) a director of agricultural produce companies received round-sum allowances in respect of business contacts entertained at home and was reimbursed travelling expenses relating to a car provided for him. His itinerary included a three-weekly tour of agricultural districts when he was sometimes accompanied by his wife. The Commissioners found that the evidence submitted was insufficient to justify the whole of the expenses and inconclusive as to their quality with the result that over half the expenses were assessed as a benefit.

In this connection the notes published by the Revenue do not specify the amount of detail required, although the preservation of vouchers is recommended. In relation to entertaining, however, it seems that the records should be sufficient to identify:

(1) the particular occasion;
(2) the nature of the entertainment;
(3) the persons present; and
(4) the reason for the occasion.

In conclusion it may be noted that the Revenue are empowered to grant dispensations which relieve employer and subordinate from the duty of including in returns such items as may be specified, e.g. travelling and subsistence expenses in respect of routine business journeys in the United Kingdom, but any such dispensation is subject to review and may indeed be withdrawn retrospectively.

Industrial Security

by K. G. WRIGHT
Managing Director, Industrial Security Consultants Ltd

SECURITY is a word that is pronounced with a certain amount of suspicion in commercial circles. Very few people have really thought out what the true function of industrial security is. On the one hand, you have people who imagine that commercial security work is a cross between the life of James Bond and Inspector Maigret. Indeed, a man once applied to me for a job (he was an actor) because he felt that the necessary qualifications for security work were the ability to assume various disguises, and – a touch which a Lancashire audience may appreciate – the fact that he had met Chief Inspector Barlow in the flesh!

On the other hand, there are plenty of people who think that security in industry requires no special 'know-how'. To them, security is one of the 'Parkinson' subjects; everyone feels qualified to express an opinion because they all consider that security is simply common sense applied to the job in hand.

Perhaps, therefore, I should give my definition of the function of security in industry. It is this – 'to prevent all forms of avoidable loss in commercial enterprises'. However, I think we should take this definition a stage further, since we are considering the commercial world, and add that the prevention of avoidable loss must be achieved profitably.

Address given to the Manchester Chapter of the Institute of Internal Auditors on January 19th.

This is where industrial security differs from Government security. In Government security you know that you have enemies who are seeking to penetrate the secrets or the establishments you protect. In industrial security you are not sure that the enemy is after your property. Government security aims at maximum security: industrial security aims at optimum security. Government security is concerned with the end – the object being to achieve a very high level of security – and in this sense the end justifies the means, or the expense of security. But in industrial security the end is subject to a means test; for in a commercial enterprise there is no future in spending sixpence to save a penny.

Certain big concerns with specially vulnerable businesses, or with reputations which must not be exposed to criticism on the grounds of inadequate security, may approximate to the Government approach to security. But, in by far the greater part of the commercial and industrial sector, security must pay its own way. Let us then look at the opportunities that exist for security to do this.

The national bill for poor security is made up of several different items of avoidable loss. The first heading which will occur to almost everybody is CRIME. We all know that we are faced with a growing crime wave. We cannot open our newspapers without reading of bank hold-ups, wage snatches, and other kinds of robbery, generally accompanied by some degree of violence.

The Security Gazette recently published its estimate of the losses to the public through crime in 1963, basing its calculations on the indictable offences known to police forces in England, Wales and Scotland. The Security Gazette arrived at a figure of over £30 million – excluding the £2½ million 'Great train robbery'. This figure, of course, containing many thefts of private property, is not wholly attributable to industry. Please remember, though, that it is a figure based on known losses only.

The second heading of loss, again widely publicized and well known to all of us, is FIRE loss. Here the annual loss is more than double the figure for indictable offences. The fire losses for 1964 will almost certainly amount to more than £70 million. At the end of November they stood at £64 million and since then there has been a £5 million loss at Bishopsgate Station in London to add to the expected £4 million loss for December.

So fire and crime together cost the country over £100 million a year in known losses.

Unknown Losses in Industry

But what of the unknown losses? There is an enormous hidden figure of loss which is borne by British industry every year. This is often referred to euphemistically as 'shrinkage' or 'wastage'; but what it really amounts to is that a proportion of every firm's turnover vanishes into thin air and nobody can say where it has gone. There is no accurate way of calculating how much is lost in this way every year, but I can give you a few pointers and an estimate which will indicate the size of the problem.

A well-known and very long established security firm working in the retail trade has estimated on the basis of its extensive past experience that about £80 million is lost in the retail trade alone through 'wastage' each year. This particular security firm only covers a part of the retail operation – shoplifting and 'till fiddling' – so that you can add a further substantial loss for 'delivery fiddles' and pilferage from stockrooms to this huge sum.

The 'wastage' figure considered normal in the retail business is around 1–1½ per cent of turnover. Anything better than this is very good. From my own knowledge I could tell you of many, many firms whose wastage results are far worse than 1½ per cent of turnover. I know of cases where losses of up to 5 per cent and even 7 per cent have been incurred in individual branches and departments. This makes it hardly worth staying in business in trades like grocery or in the supermarket field, where profit margins are extremely low.

Moreover, this wastage problem is by no means confined to retail businesses. Factories are hit almost as severely, particularly if they produce attractive consumer goods like cosmetics or radio sets. I could quote instances of wastage of well over 1 per cent in factories producing quite unattractive-sounding goods. I have even come across a case of a 10 per cent unexplained loss rate in a factory!

If we try to estimate the cost to British industry of these hidden losses, it would probably not be overstating the case to say that on average one-half of 1 per cent of annual turnover is lost through avoidable wastage in every firm throughout the country. I am not referring now to machine breakdowns or accidents or to inevitable loss during production processes, but simply to losses caused by carelessness or worse which are tolerated in every part of commercial life.

That is my own personal estimate, and it could well prove the understatement of the year. You, as auditors, know a lot more about the incidence of this kind of loss than most people, and I should be very interested to hear whether you agree that mine is a reasonable estimate or not. But suppose for the moment that we accept my figure as about right; this would mean the hidden figure for avoidable losses in British industry amounted to £150 million a year – that is, taking one-half of 1 per cent on a gross national product of £30 billion. This is a mountainous figure – half as big again as the known total of fire and crime losses put together. But, as I say, I think it probably under-estimates the real position.

Obviously, therefore, there is a vast field for security operations in industry. Of course, all the losses I have been totting up cannot be eliminated altogether; but even if we assume that no more than a third of the total of £250 million we have clocked can be brought under control, we are estimating that better security could save British industry over £80 million a year.

The cost of making this saving should be fractional compared with the amount industry stands to gain. A great deal of the necessary work can be done by improving existing organization and methods at very low cost. It seems to me that in this field there is a great deal of slack that could be taken up to everybody's advantage – particularly at this moment when industry and commerce is under pressure from the Government to absorb rising costs by increasing efficiency.

Public Apathy

Those of us who are professionally concerned with security are continually being astonished by the apathy and complacency of people whose property is really extremely vulnerable. We are astonished, too, by the number of businesses which do not seem to be worried by the rate of their avoidable loss. Many firms seem to think that it is not worth waging war on petty dishonesty – on pilfering and minor embezzlements or frauds. Perhaps they are afraid of unpleasantness of one sort or another, of bad publicity, or even of the difficulty of filling vacant jobs in these days of full employment. Perhaps there is a cynical acceptance that part of the terms of employment is the 'perks' employees can take out of the business; that if wastage were cut down this could lead to wage demands. If this is so, it is a bad look-out for our national morale and character. In an atmosphere of this kind security is a non-starter and, if I may suggest it, so is efficiency and common sense. Good security is a manifestation of efficiency. It is not a piece of purposeless window-dressing but a real contribution to the most effective use of available resources.

If the national bill for poor security which I have drawn up strikes you as being staggeringly large, perhap you would care to speculate on what the bill might be if everybody in the country was as 'slap-happy' and apathetic as the people who allow themselves to suffer these prodigious losses. In the post-war period the security industry in Britain has grown from being a small boy until it is quite a well-developed man today.

Commercial Value of Good Security

More safes – and better ones – are being produced than ever before; more fire and burglar alarms are being installed; more watchmen and patrol services are operating; more valuables are being carried in armoured vehicles; more stores detectives are on guard; and, of course, more good and impartial advice on security is available than ever before – both from the police and from commercial sources. Industrial security is more active now than it has ever been, and its clients are steadily growing more numerous. This shows that the commercial value of good security is winning recognition all the time.

It seems pretty obvious to me that as a lot of firms grow more security conscious, those that lag behind in this respect will become increasingly vulnerable. For in a large part of the loss area we have been discussing, the criminal or the pilferer is tempted to his target because everything is made so easy for him. Once you start to take an interest in security, you start to make things difficult for the dishonest, and as soon as this happens you begin to get results. At present crime and dishonesty thrive on the apathy and complacency of those who say 'this cannot happen to us'. Of course it can happen, and it does happen to these people, and it will go on happening to them as long as they put off joining the ranks of the sensible who have made up their minds that 'it will not happen to us'.

In the past, many of the apathetic were confirmed in their inclination to do nothing about security by the fact that they had insurance policies to cover them against loss, whether from fire or burglary. But the loss figures I have given you have made a profound impression on the insurance industry, and a much tougher attitude to risks is being adopted by all the big insurance concerns now.

This increased toughness is shown not only by the classic insurance reaction to an unprofitable slice of the market – namely, to increase premium rates – but it is also being shown in a markedly more selective approach to the risks they will accept for insurance. Fire and burglary risks are being inspected more closely than before, and stricter requirements for protection are being written into policies now than was the case a year or two ago. These stricter requirements are being accompanied – especially in the case of fire insurances – with substantial offers of discount on premises where approved protective devices have been installed.

Security Equipment

In adopting this approach more widely than in the past we in Britain are following the example of the United States, where the insurance industry has set up its own testing laboratories in which security equipment is assessed and graded. Premium discounts, sometimes running as high as 70 per cent, are allowed according to the grade of equipment used to protect a particular risk. Even the grading of security equipment is beginning in this country through the British Standards Institution although, so far, little of the work done on these lines has been published. In fire research we in Britain are the envy of the Americans and everybody else. The problem is to make industry realize how much it can do to cut its avoidable losses; the problem of saying how loss can be reduced has been very largely solved.

The insurance industry has a great part to play in promoting industrial security. It has an unique screw which it can apply to the apathetic and the irresponsible. It can – and today it quite often does – refuse to give insurance cover at all, unless its minimum requirements are met. Those who insure their property against loss have always been required to protect their goods as they would if they had taken out no insurance cover. This requirement has been tacitly ignored by both sides on many occasions in the past. Today it means what it says again. It will be interesting to see how many of the gentlemen who scornfully declare that 'it cannot happen to us' are sufficiently confident to back their belief against the withdrawal of insurance support.

It is possible to visualize the insurance industry eliminating certain types of crime altogether. For example, if it were known as a certain fact that no jeweller's shop anywhere in the country would be granted insurance cover unless its show windows were constructed of security glass, 'smash and grab' raids on jewellers' shops would be cut out altogether – it would take far too long to do the job. There is a school of thought that argues – I am sure with tongue in cheek – that this would be undesirable. Bandits would be driven to go into the shops and take whatever they wanted by violence.

If we continue this line of argument, however, I suppose we could go on to say that strong-rooms and burglar alarms which protect valuables overnight are undesirable for the same reason – they would compel bandits to operate in day-time and to use violence against the persons of staff on the premises they wish to attack. Presumably we finish up by blaming the system of cashing cheques for the recent outburst of armed bank hold-ups. If the banks would only give away money to anyone who asked for it, there would be no need to brandish shotguns to take what doesn't belong to you!

Obviously, this is all nonsense. Every channel of loss that can be blocked, should be blocked. In the long run it then becomes easier to see what you are up against and to devise means of defeating it. There are a variety of ways in which premises could be protected against armed raids, and although some of those methods seem fantastic or extravagant, circumstances may one day compel us to use them. After all, there must be many people today who can remember the time when it would have seemed ridiculous to imagine hundreds of armoured vehicles running in the streets of Britain to carry valuables about in safety.

Uninsurable Risks

But however great the part the insurance industry can play in strengthening security against some forms of avoidable loss, it can make little contribution to the war against the enormous hidden losses to which I referred earlier on. I make no apology for coming back to this point, because I believe it to be of the greatest importance for us all. These losses do not represent insurable risks. They are unexplained, unidentifiable. They must be borne out of earnings, and they constitute a formidable drag on productivity and a heavy charge on costs – and hence on the prices charged to the customer.

The first thing that can be done to combat these hidden losses is to become aware of the problem. All too often attention is fixed exclusively on sales or production figures, while wastage losses grow unchecked until they reach such serious dimensions that something really must be done about them. Managements clearly have an interest in holding down these losses, and, I submit, they have a duty, too – a duty not only to their shareholders but to their employees. Temptation should not be thrust under people's noses.

I know that many enlightened and progressive managements recognize this, and accept it as one of the reasons for setting up security systems and controls in their organizations. I am sure that closer attention to the causes of avoidable losses in business would more than repay any cost that had to be incurred. Not the least part of the repayment would be a general improvement in morale and efficiency which would have beneficial effects far outside the factory or the shop.

Industrial security is still a very young concept. It is growing fast, and it is going to go on growing. I hope that I have shown what a big part it can play in the commercial life of the country if its potentialities are given full rein. Industrial security already has a lot to offer – the solution to many of the problems that plague managements has already been worked out – and there will be more and more to be gained as new equipment and new techniques are evolved.

The future must lie, to an increasing extent, with automation in every field of industry, and industrial security is already moving with the times – in fact, it is well ahead of at least some of its clients. It is not only possible to protect premises against burglary and fire by electronic systems, but to use similar systems to monitor water flow or temperatures and to control many other industrial processes. In an age of technology and technocrats, the computer must play its part in security too, and already a security service is handling the distribution of wages with the aid of data processing equipment; and there are one or two developments (still in the wings as it were) for using computer analysis to locate black spots for crime.

It is important that industrial security should be continually moving forward and calling all the power of scientific development in aid, for the offensive weapons available to the criminal grow stronger, too, as technological progress is made. You can never sit still for long in the security world: it is a constant battle of wits. Defences that seemed impregnable only a few years ago can now be beaten, unless they are carefully integrated in a planned system, and the crime wave goes on swelling all the time.

Moral standards show no signs of improving, and the populations of borstals and detention centres for the young offender are still increasing. One of the latest theories about the causes of crime suggests that in an affluent society the craze for 'keeping up with the Joneses' puts such pressure on the weaker brethren among us that they are driven to unlawful ways of acquiring the wealth they feel they must have. The more you have, the more you want. On the other hand, if there is a recession in prosperity, there will be added pressures to rob and steal and pilfer. The less you have, the more you want. It seems to be a case of 'heads, we lose' and 'tails, we don't win'.

Educating Industry and the Public

The great problem in the security field is that of educating industry and the public. We all know there is a big job to tackle; we all know that it is getting bigger every year. We in the security profession know that there is a great deal we can do about it. The problem is to make more people in industry and commerce realize that properly-planned security expenditure is not just an unproductive overhead – that it is, in fact, an investment that can pay handsome dividends in money saved, in increased efficiency and, not by any means least, in the reduction of physical risk to staff.

There is a swing towards realizing these facts at last. The insurance industry is helping enormously, our friends in the police all over the country are mounting vigorous crime prevention campaigns, the Press is always lending its great weight to the drive against crime and dishonesty. More and more people are starting to think about security in industry and commerce and to realize what can be done. A good understanding is the beginning of wisdom.

The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales

Internal Control

Statement on Auditing No. 4

This is the fourth in the series of Statements on Auditing issued by the Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales for the guidance of members. It deals with the system of internal control as a responsibility and function of management, the essential characteristics of such a system, its operation both generally and in relation to particular aspects of commercial activity, and its relevance for auditors. The statement relates primarily to trading concerns incorporated under the Companies Act, 1948; but the principles discussed apply to any organization in which the handling and recording of transactions, funds and property are entrusted to others on behalf of the owners.

An appendix dealing with the relation of internal audit to the statutory audit reproduces in substance and now replaces Members' Handbook S3, NOTES ON THE RELATION OF THE INTERNAL AUDIT TO THE STATUTORY AUDIT, issued in August 1953.

Internal Control as a Responsibility and Function of Management

(1) The responsibility for establishing and maintaining an adequate system of internal control lies with a company's directors. Apart from the practical necessity to conduct business in a proper and efficient manner, this duty may be inferred from the requirements of section 147 of the Companies Act, 1948, relating to the keeping of accounts, and is statutorily recognized in the case of building societies, for instance, by a specific requirement to establish a system of control (section 76 (1) (b) of the Building Societies Act, 1962). At the same time it has to be recognized that no system of internal control, however elaborate, can by itself guarantee efficient administration or be proof against fraudulent collusion, especially on the part of those holding positions of authority.

(2) General Principles of Auditing defines internal control in relation to companies incorporated under the Companies Act, 1948, as follows:

> 'By "internal control" is meant not only internal check and internal audit but the whole system of controls, financial and otherwise, established by the management in order to carry on the business of the company in an orderly manner, safeguard its assets and secure as far as possible the accuracy and reliability of its records.' (Statement on Auditing No. 1, paragraph 10.)

(3) It will be observed that internal control extends beyond financial and accounting matters and the custody of company assets. Such functions as work study, operations research and production quality control, for example, may be an integral part of the system although not falling within the sphere of finance and accounting. This Statement is however primarily concerned with those aspects of internal control which constitute the system of financial and accounting control, that is, those matters which relate to the custody and control of the company's assets and the recording of its transactions, including internal check and internal audit.

Essential Characteristics

(4) The elements of internal control are:

(a) the plan of organization (with particular reference to the allocation of staff duties);

(b) authorization, recording and custody procedures (including internal check); and

(c) managerial supervision and reviews (including internal audit).

Plan of Organization

(5) There can be no effective internal control without an adequate plan of organization. This involves the separation of a company's operations into appropriate divisions and sub-divisions, the appointment of persons to assume responsibility therefor, the establishment of clear lines of responsibility between each division and sub-division and the board of directors, and overall co-ordination of the company's activities.

Authorization, Recording and Custody Procedures (including Internal Check)

(6) The objects of financial and accounting control procedures are to ensure that the funds and property of the company are kept under proper custody and may not be improperly applied, either by error or intent; that expenditure may be incurred only after authorization, and is properly accounted for; and that all revenues are properly accounted for and received in due course.

(7) The achievement of these objects involves a suitable division of duties, the establishment of an appropriate accounting system and the institution of forms of internal check. By internal check is meant the checks on day-to-day transactions which operate continuously as part of the routine system whereby the work of one person is proved independently or is complementary to the work of another, the object being the prevention or early detection of errors or fraud.

(8) A first principle is that all transactions, either individually or in groups, should involve surveillance by at least two persons, so far as possible independent of each other. Surveillance may take two forms:

(a) participation by others, through the division of responsibilities, in the processes by which a transaction is authorized, conducted and recorded; and

(b) the subjection of the individual's work to prompt and regular independent verification, by such means as reconciliation with pre-ascertained totals or direct examination.

Managerial Supervision and Reviews (including Internal Audit)

(9) An important feature of effective internal control is that directors should review the company's financial operations and position at regular and frequent intervals by means of interim accounts and reports, operating summaries and other appropriate financial and statistical information. Comparison with results for previous periods may indicate discrepancies that call for further examination or, where budgetary control is in use, attention will be drawn to material variances and explanations required. In addition to regular reviews of this nature management may from time to time call for special reviews of particular items such as stocks, or the operation of the wages department; these constitute yet another instrument of control. In smaller firms examinations of the nature indicated may be carried out by the owner or manager personally. Managerial supervision and reviews of this nature are an essential element in any effective internal control system.

(10) Internal audit is a review of operations and records, sometimes continuous, undertaken within a business by specially assigned staff. The scope and objectives of the internal audit vary widely in different businesses and may, particularly in large organizations, extend to many matters which are not directly of an accounting nature. The internal auditors' duties on non-accounting matters would not normally be a matter for consideration by the independent auditors and they are therefore not considered further in this Statement. On accounting matters the main objective of an internal audit is to assure management that the internal check and the accounting system are effective in design and operation.

Practical Applications

(11) The system of internal control to be adopted, and the means by which it is to be communicated and implemented, vary according to the nature and circumstances of each business. Broadly it may be said that larger companies tend to find it desirable, if not essential, to define their organization and procedures in writing, while smaller companies which are subject to closer proprietorial control may adopt a more informal approach. It remains true in all circumstances however that staff should be clearly aware of the scope and the limitations of their responsibilities. Some of the main practical factors to be considered in establishing an appropriate system of internal control are described in Appendix 1 of this Statement.

(12) In considering these matters it should be borne in mind that there are no absolute standards of internal control. The circumstances and needs of businesses vary so greatly that no two are exactly alike. The most that may be said by way of generalization is that an adequate system of internal control is one that is both economic and effective having regard to the resources, size and nature of the business concerned. Particular procedures should therefore be weighed against the risks they are designed to check. The cost of operating a check on any particular activity should be viewed in relation to the possible loss if the check were removed. A company may for example recognize that the cost of close supervision of cash collection by salesmen (for example roundsmen) would be prohibitive. Similarly it may be considered that checking the extensions and casts of suppliers' invoices is of little value where small amounts are involved, and checking of invoices for sums below a stated amount may in consequence be abandoned or curtailed.

(13) Although cash is the most readily convertible of assets and thus most vulnerable to misappropriation, it normally forms only part of an undertaking's total assets, and equal attention should be given to custody and control procedures involving other forms of property, such as stocks. In all these matters the importance of physical as well as documentary controls should be borne in mind.

(14) Automatic data processing can contribute materially to the effectiveness of internal control. For example, mechanized accounting systems generally involve the employment of specialist staff, to whom the recording function is entrusted, with the consequence that division and limitation of duties is automatically ensured. Furthermore, mechanized systems permit the ready preparation of totals for checking purposes.

Audit Practice in Relation to Internal Control

(15) In the audit of larger companies it is not the practice to scrutinize every transaction in detail but to select groups of transactions for close examination. In making this selection auditors have regard to the system of internal control.

(16) The first step is to ascertain the prescribed system. Some companies have organization charts and procedures manuals to which auditors can refer; others possess little in the way of written instructions and the auditors must rely on inquiry and observation. In all circumstances it is essential that the auditors should prepare, and retain, a record of the system in use, which should be revised and brought up to date regularly. The techniques adopted to draw up these records vary from narrative based on informal questioning (often reinforced by the use of aides-mémoire or check lists) to the completion of comprehensive questionnaires.

(17) The object of the auditors' examination of the system is to determine the nature and extent of the audit procedures to be applied in order to establish the reliability of the records as a basis for the preparation of accounts which will present a true and fair view.

(18) The auditors' examination may be divided into three stages: ascertainment, testing and assessment. These are, however, integral parts of a single process, normally carried on concurrently. In practice the procedures described do not fall into such clearly marked separate stages.

(19) Examination involves ascertaining not only the procedures prescribed but also those actually used in practice. Unless careful supervision is exercised by responsible officials procedures tend to be unofficially modified with the passing of time and changes of staff. A theoretically sound system may prove defective in operation because its rules are not properly observed, or because the circumstances of the business have changed. Auditors should therefore seek, by inquiry, observation and tests, to ascertain that the system is being properly and effectively operated by competent staff. On the results of these observations auditors base their opinion of the adequacy of the internal control system.

(20) The normal procedure is to select representative sections of the company's records for examination in detail and testing in depth to ensure that transactions are properly authorized, evidenced and recorded. (The considerations involved in testing in depth are described in Statement on Auditing No. 1, General Principles of Auditing, paragraphs 16 to 22.)

(21) Some aspects of an internal control system may be verified in operation by direct observation. For instance, auditors may consider that attendance at stocktaking or payment of wages would assist them in the performance of their duties, the object of such attendance being to observe the operation of the prescribed procedures.

(22) Where the system of internal control is judged inadequate the auditors must decide whether, and if so how far, audit tests should be extended to cover the unsatisfactory aspects of the system. As in all their work, however, they should preserve a sense of proportion; the uncovering of petty irregularities in circumstances where the maximum possible loss is insignificant will not always necessarily warrant extensive examination.

(23) It is in the interests of all concerned – shareholders, management, employees and auditors – that any defects in the system of internal control, or respects in which there is scope for improvement, should be reported to the appropriate persons and the facts placed on record. This is particularly important where the system of internal control is judged inadequate in material respects, since such circumstances must cast doubts on the basic reliability of the records presented to the auditors. The possibility of error and omission, whether deliberate or accidental, may be materially increased in such circumstances. As was stated in General Principles of Auditing, paragraph 22:

> 'In exceptional cases, auditors may find that the records and the system of internal control are so seriously inadequate that no useful purpose could be served by embarking upon extensive detailed checking, because even the most exhaustive tests would not enable them to form an opinion on the balance sheet and profit and loss account. In that event their appropriate course will be to report to that effect to the shareholders and to inform the directors of the respects in which the records and system are deficient.'

(24) Where an internal audit is carried out it is for the independent auditors to decide whether and to what extent, consistently with their statutory responsibilities, they can rely on the work of the internal auditors in order to reduce the extent of their own examination of detail. Their decision will depend upon their judgment on the facts of each case, having regard in particular to:

(a) the extent and efficiency of the internal audit. In order to assess these matters the independent auditors should examine the internal audit programmes, working papers and reports and should make such tests as they think fit of the work done by the internal auditor;

(b) the experience and qualifications of the internal auditors and their staff and the character of their reports;

(c) the authority vested in the internal auditors and the level of management to which they are directly responsible.

The independent auditors cannot in any circumstances divest themselves of the responsibilities laid on them by statute. (For a more detailed examination of the field of relationship between independent and internal auditors see Appendix 2.)

Application to Smaller Companies

(25) Internal control is of importance to small as well as to larger companies, although its method of operation will necessarily vary from that adopted in major concerns. Where the number of employees is too few to establish an adequate division of duties, additional importance attaches to proper supervision by the owner, manager or other responsible employee.

(26) Special problems may arise in the circumstances of a small firm whose business is expanding. There is an intermediate stage when it is no longer practicable for the owner or manager to maintain his ...ofessional gu... suitable safeguards ...ablished. Much, however, ...t to which the owner or ...tinue effectively to supervise ...ne business; the extent to which ...rol is practicable and can be made ...o be judged in the light of the limita... ...erent in the situation. The problem assumes ... importance where the manager is also a ...irector and sole beneficial shareholder and thus the effective owner of the business.

(27) In some circumstances the auditors may form the view that the business is soundly controlled by the manager, but that ultimately the reliability of the records depends almost entirely on one person. The auditors should have regard to this factor when determining the nature and extent of the work they consider necessary to carry out. For example in the case of > '. . . a small company the tests which the auditors make will normally cover a greater proportion of the transactions than is necessary for a larger company where a more comprehensive system of control can be and is operated. In selecting items for examination and deciding upon the extent of the work to be done the auditors should always consider to what extent the transactions under review are material in relation to the affairs of the company as a whole.' (Statement on Auditing No. 1, General Principles of Auditing, paragraph 19.)

The circumstances need careful weighing where the manager is not sole shareholder but acts in a position of trust on behalf of others who do not participate in the management of the business.

PRACTICAL ASPECTS OF INTERNAL CONTROL

This appendix deals with some of the principal factors that commonly arise when considering practical aspects of internal control. It does not purport to establish comprehensive internal control standards; as pointed out in paragraph 12 of the statement, the needs and circumstances of businesses vary so greatly that this would be impossible. Sometimes preferences for particular procedures are indicated, but these should be read as suggestions for guidance rather than firm recommendations; the practicability and usefulness of such procedures should be assessed in the light of the resources and requirements of specific businesses.

Special points, such as control procedures relating to branches and branch records, or share transfers, are not dealt with.

...n dealing with t... detail it is conveni... functions under appr... fication of operations f... follows:

(a) general financial arrange...
(b) cash and cheques receive... bank balances)
(c) cheque and cash payments
(d) wages and salaries
(e) purchases and trade creditors
(f) sales and trade debtors
(g) stock (including work in progress)
(h) fixed assets and investments.

Some of the principal considerations that arise ... examining these items from the point of view of internal control are dealt with below.

General Financial Arrangements

(2) In addition to the establishment of a plan of organization and observation of the general principles outlined in paragraphs 4 to 10 of the Statement, the general financial arrangements involved in instituting a system of internal control include:

(a) devising an appropriate and properly integrated system of accounts and records
(b) determining the form of general financial supervision and control by management, using such means as budgetary control, regular interim accounts of suitable frequency, and special reports
(c) ensuring that adequate precautions are taken to safeguard (and if necessary to duplicate and store separately) important records
(d) engaging, training and allocating to specific duties management and staff competent to fulfil their responsibilities; arranging for rotation of duties as necessary; and deputing responsibilities during staff absences.

Cash and Cheques Received (including Cash and Bank Balances)

Receipts by Post and Cash Sales

(3) The risk of misappropriation of cash and cheques needs no emphasis. Safeguards vary according to the circumstances of each business, but the principles of control may be summarized as follows: the number of persons handling cash and cheques should be restricted; responsibilities should be clearly defined; the principles of division of duties, particularly as between the recording and custodianship functions, should be observed as far as possible; adequate supervision and independent checks should be imposed;

…, to open, …

…ques received are (i) …stance, by the restric… …ques, money orders and …andling) and (ii) properly … instance, by the preparation …neys received for independent … subsequent records and book …

…ishing an adequate system of control over …sales and collections it should be decided:

… is to be authorized to receive cash and cash …cles (i.e. whether such items are to be …eceived only by cashiers or may be accepted by sales assistants, travellers, roundsmen, or others)

(b) how sales and the receipt of cash and cash articles are to be evidenced, and what checks may usefully be adopted as regards such transactions (for instance, by the use of serially numbered receipt forms or counterfoils, or cash registers incorporating sealed till rolls).

Custody and Control of Money Received

(6) Money received should be subject to adequate safeguards and controls at all stages up to lodgement in the bank. Amongst the matters which may require consideration are the following:

(a) the appointment of suitable persons to be responsible at different stages for the collection and handling of money received, with clearly defined responsibilities

(b) how, by whom, and with what frequency cash offices and registers are to be cleared

(c) what arrangements are to be made for agreeing cash collections with cash and sales records (preferably this should be carried out by a person independent of the receiving cashier or employee)

(d) according to the nature of the business, what arrangements are to be made for dealing with, recording and investigating any cash shortages or surpluses.

Recording

(7) Incoming cash and cheques should be recorded as soon as possible. Means of recording include, as appropriate, receipt forms and counterfoils, cash registers and post lists. Matters for consideration include the following:

(a) who is to be responsible for maintaining records of money received

(b) what practicable limitations may be put on the duties and responsibilities of the receiving cashier particularly as regards dealing with such matters as other books of account, other funds, slips; and how alte…

… responsible, …

Payments into Bank

(8) It is desirable that cash and … should be lodged with the bank with the … delay. Adequate control over bank lodgeme… involve settling rules as to:

(a) how frequently payments are to be made into the bank (preferably daily)

(b) who is to make up the bank paying-in slips (preferably this should be done by a person independent of the receiving and recording cashier) and whether there is to be any independent check of paying-in slips against post-lists, receipt counterfoils and cash-book entries

(c) who is to make payments into the bank (preferably not the person responsible for preparing paying-in slips)

(d) whether all receipts are to be banked intact; if not, how disbursements are to be controlled.

Cash and Bank Balances

(9) Questions to be decided in connection with the control of cash balances include:

(a) what amounts are to be retained as cash floats at cash desks and registers, and whether payments out of cash received are to be permitted

(b) what restrictions are to be imposed as to access to cash registers and offices

(c) rules regarding the size of cash floats to meet expenses, and their methods of reimbursement

(d) the frequency with which cash floats are to be checked by independent officials

(e) what arrangements are to be made for safeguarding cash left on the premises outside business hours

(f) whether any special insurance arrangements (such as fidelity guarantee and cash insurance) are judged desirable having regard to the nature of the business, the sums handled, and the length of time they are kept on the premises

(g) what additional independent checks on cash may usefully be operated (for instance, by periodic surprise cash counts)

(h) what arrangements are to be made for the control of funds held in trust for employees, both those which are the legal responsibility of the company and, as necessary, those which are held by nominated employees independent of the company's authority (for instance, sick funds or holiday clubs).

(10) Regular reconciliation of bank accounts by a responsible official is an essential element of control

Of particular interest to Owners or Major Shareholders in Private Industrial Companies situated preferably in the North-west, Yorkshire or the Midlands

SHOULD you wish to explore the possibility of joining a substantial holding company we invite you to communicate with us at Blackfriars House, the Headquarters in Manchester of Whitecroft Industrial Holdings Limited (formerly Bleachers' Association Limited).

This invitation is principally addressed to Owners or controlling Directors of private companies, with progressive management, whose net profits before tax range between £30,000 and £250,000 p.a. and who for family or other reasons wish to sell the whole or part of their businesses.

It is the normal practice that Members joining the Group continue to manage their companies and Vendors are encouraged to retain a minority shareholding with full safeguards. Every facility is given to subsidiary companies to extend their activities and ample funds are available for this purpose.

buying ('authorization'), receipt of goods ('custody') and accounting ('recording').

Buying

(25) Factors to be considered include:

(a) the procedure to be followed when issuing requisitions for additions to and replacements of stocks, and the persons to be responsible for such requisitions

(b) the preparation and authorization of purchase orders (including procedures for authorizing acceptance where tenders have been submitted or prices quoted)

(c) the institution of checks for the safe-keeping of order forms and safeguarding their use

(d) as regards capital items, any special arrangements as to authorizations required (for a fuller description of this aspect see the section dealing with fixed assets below).

Goods Inwards

(26) Factors to be considered include:

(a) arrangements for examining goods inwards as to quantity, quality and condition, and for evidencing such examination

(b) the appointment of a person responsible for accepting goods, and the procedure for recording and evidencing their arrival and acceptance

(c) the procedure to be instituted for checking goods inwards records against authorized purchase orders.

Accounting

(27) Factors to be considered include:

(a) the appointment of persons so far as possible separately responsible for:
- (i) checking suppliers' invoices
- (ii) recording purchases and purchase returns
- (iii) maintaining suppliers' ledger accounts or similar records
- (iv) checking suppliers' statements
- (v) authorizing payment

(b) arrangements to ensure that before accounts are paid:
- (i) the goods concerned have been received, accord with the purchase order, are properly priced and correctly invoiced
- (ii) the expenditure has been properly allocated, and
- (iii) payment has been duly authorized by the official responsible

(c) the establishment of appropriate procedures in connection with purchase returns, special credits and other adjustments

(d) arrangements to ensure that liabilities relating to goods received during an accounting period are properly brought into the accounts of the period concerned (i.e. cut-off procedures)

(e) the establishment of arrangements to deal with purchases from companies or branches forming part of the same group

(f) arrangements to deal with purchases made for employees under special terms

(g) regular independent checking of suppliers' accounts against current statements, or direct verification with suppliers

(h) the institution of a purchases control account and its regular checking by an independent official against suppliers' balances.

Sales and Trade Debtors

(28) The separation of authorization, custodianship and recording functions described above in respect of purchases and trade creditors applies similarly to sales and trade debtors.

Sales

(29) Considerations include the following:

(a) what arrangements are to be made to ensure that goods are sold at their correct prices, and to deal with and check exchanges, discounts and special reductions including those in connection with cash sales

(b) who is to be responsible for, and how control is to be maintained over, the granting of credit terms to customers

(c) who is to be responsible for accepting customers' orders, and what procedure is to be adopted for issuing production orders and dispatch notes

(d) who is to be responsible for the preparation of invoices and credit notes and what controls are to be instituted to prevent errors and irregularities (for instance, how selling prices are to be ascertained and authorized, how the issue of credit notes is to be controlled and checked, what checks there should be on the prices, quantities, extensions and totals shown on invoices and credit notes, and how such documents in blank or completed are to be protected against loss or misuse)

(e) what special controls are to be exercised over the dispatch of goods free of charge or on special terms.

Goods Outwards

(30) Factors to be considered include:

(a) who may authorize the dispatch of goods and how such authority is to be evidenced

(b) what arrangements are to be made to examine and record goods outwards (preferably this should be done by a person who has no access to stocks and has no accounting or invoicing duties)

(c) the procedure to be instituted for agreeing goods outwards records with customers' orders, dispatch notes and invoices.

Accounting

(31) So far as possible sales ledger staff should have no access to cash, cash-books or stocks, and should not be responsible for invoicing and other duties normally assigned to sales staff. The following are amongst matters which should be considered:

(a) the appointment of persons as far as possible separately responsible for

(i) recording sales and sales returns
(ii) maintaining customers' accounts
(iii) preparing debtors' statements

(b) the establishment of appropriate control procedures in connection with sales returns, price adjustments and similar matters

(c) arrangements to ensure that goods dispatched but not invoiced (or vice versa) during an accounting period are properly dealt with in the accounts of the period concerned (i.e. cut-off procedures)

(d) the establishment of arrangements to deal with sales to companies or branches forming part of the same group

(e) what procedures are to be adopted for the preparation, checking and dispatch of debtors' statements and for ensuring that they are not subject to interference before dispatch

(f) how discounts granted and special terms are to be authorized and evidenced

(g) who is to deal with customers' queries arising in connection with statements

(h) what procedure is to be adopted for reviewing and following up overdue accounts

(i) who is to authorize the writing off of bad debts, and how such authority is to be evidenced

(j) the institution of a sales control account and its regular checking preferably by an independent official against customers' balances on the sales ledger.

Stocks (including Work in Progress)

(32) It was indicated in paragraph 13 of the Statement that stocks may be as susceptible to irregularities as cash: in some circumstances the risks of loss may be materially higher. Arrangements for the control of stocks should be framed with this in mind.

(33) In summary it may be said that stock control procedures should ensure that stocks held are adequately protected against loss or misuse, are properly applied in the operations of the business, and are duly accounted for. According to the nature of the business separate arrangements may be necessary for different categories of stocks, such as raw materials, components, work in progress, finished goods and consumable stores.

(34) Amongst the main considerations may be listed the following:

(a) what arrangements are to be made for receiving, checking and recording goods inwards (see also paragraphs (24) to (27) relating to purchases and trade creditors above)

(b) who is to be responsible for the safeguarding of stocks and what precautions are to be taken against theft, misuse and deterioration

(c) what arrangements are to be made for controlling (through maximum and minimum stock limits) and recording stocks (e.g. by stock ledgers, independent control accounts and continuous stock records such as bin cards); who is to be responsible for keeping stock records (preferably persons who have no access to stocks and are not responsible for sales and purchase records); and what procedure is to be followed as to the periodic reconciliation of stock records with the financial accounts

(d) how movements of stock out of store (or from one process or department to another) are to be authorized, evidenced and recorded, and what steps are to be taken to guard against irregularities

(e) what arrangements are to be made for dealing with and accounting for returnable containers (both suppliers' and own)

(f) what arrangements are to be made for dealing with and maintaining accounting control over company stocks held by others (for instance, goods in warehouse, on consignment or in course of processing) and goods belonging to others held by the company (e.g. how withdrawals are to be authorized and evidenced, and how goods belonging to others are to be distinguished from own goods)

(g) what persons are to be responsible for physically checking stocks, at what intervals such checks are to be carried out, and what procedures are to be followed (for instance, if continuous stock-taking procedures are in use, arrangements should ensure that all categories of stock are counted at appropriate intervals normally at least once a year; counts should preferably be conducted by persons independent of storekeepers; how stock counts are to be recorded and evidenced; and what cut-off procedures are to be operated to ensure that stocks are adjusted to take proper account of year-end sales and purchases invoiced). (See also Statement on Auditing No. 2, Stock-in-trade and work in progress.)

(h) what bases are to be adopted for computing the amount at which stocks are to be stated in the accounts (these should be in accordance with recognized accounting principles and should be applied consistently from year to year – see Recommendations on Accounting Principles No. 22, Treatment of Stock-in-trade and Work in Progress in Financial Accounts) and which persons are to perform and check the calculations

(i) what arrangements are to be made for the periodic review of the condition of stocks, how damaged, slow-moving and obsolete stocks are to be dealt with and how write-offs are to be authorized

(j) what steps are to be taken to control and account for scrap and waste, and receipts from the disposal of such items.

Fixed Assets and Investments

Fixed Assets

(35) Some of the principal matters to be decided in connection with controls relating to fixed assets are as follows:

(a) who is to authorize capital expenditure and how such authorization is to be evidenced

(b) who is to authorize the sale, scrapping or transfer of fixed assets, how such authorization is to be evidenced, and what arrangements are to be made for controlling and dealing with receipts from disposals

(c) who is to maintain accounting records in respect of fixed assets and how it is to be ensured that the proper accounting distinction is observed between capital and revenue expenditure

(d) what arrangements are to be made for keeping plant and property registers and how frequently they are to be agreed with the relevant accounts and physically verified

(e) what arrangements are to be made to ensure that fixed assets are properly maintained and applied in the service of the company (e.g. by periodic physical checks as to their location, operation and condition)

(f) where fixed assets are transferred between branches or members of the same group, what arrangements in respect of pricing, depreciation and accounting are to be made

(g) how depreciation rates are to be authorized and evidenced, and which persons are to be responsible for carrying out and checking the necessary calculations.

Investments

(36) Arrangements for dealing with investments will involve, inter alia, determining:

(a) who is to be responsible for authorizing purchases and sales of investments, and how such authorizations are to be evidenced (those responsible should preferably have no concern with cash or the custody of documents of title)

(b) what arrangements should be made for maintaining a detailed investment register: and who should be responsible for agreeing it periodically with the investment control account and physically verifying the documents of title

(c) what arrangements are to be made for checking contract notes against authorized purchase or sale instructions and for ensuring that charges are correctly calculated: for dealing with share transfers: and for ensuring that share certificates are duly received or delivered and that bonuses, rights, capital repayments and dividends or interest are received and properly accounted for.

Documents of Title

(37) Adequate arrangements should be made for the scheduling and safe custody of property deeds, share certificates and other documents of title, with the object of protecting them against loss and irregularities. Preferably they should be deposited in a secure place under the authority and control of at least two responsible persons, and access to or withdrawals of such documents should be permissible only on the authority of such persons acting jointly.

Appendix 2

FIELD OF RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN INDEPENDENT AND INTERNAL AUDITOR

For convenience of reference this appendix reproduces paragraphs 7 to 13 of Members' Handbook S 3, NOTES ON THE RELATION OF THE INTERNAL AUDIT TO THE STATUTORY AUDIT. Paragraphs 1 to 5 of the Notes have now been superseded by this series of Statements on Auditing and paragraphs 6 and 14 are reproduced in substance in the statement INTERNAL CONTROL above.

(1) On accounting matters the internal auditor and the independent auditor operate largely in the same field and they have a common interest in ascertaining that there is:

(a) an effective system of internal check to prevent or detect errors and fraud and that it is operating satisfactorily

(b) an adequate accounting system to provide the information necessary for preparing true and fair financial statements.

(2) Although the two forms of audit have a common interest in the important matters mentioned in the preceding paragraph, there are some fundamental differences:

(a) Scope. The extent of the work undertaken by the internal auditor is determined by the management whereas that of the independent auditor arises from the responsibilities placed on him by statute

(b) Approach. The internal auditor's approach is with a view to ensuring that the accounting system is efficient, so that the accounting information presented to management throughout the period is accurate and discloses material facts. The independent auditor's approach, however, is governed by his duty to satisfy himself that the accounts to be presented to the shareholders show a true and fair view of the profit or loss for the financial period and of the state of the company's affairs at the end of that period

(c) Responsibility. The internal auditor's responsibility is to the management whereas the independent auditor is responsible directly to the shareholders. It follows that the internal auditor, being a servant of the company, does not have the independence of status which the independent auditor possesses.

(3) Notwithstanding these important differences, the work of both the internal auditor and the independent auditor, on accounting matters, is carried out largely by similar means, such as:

(a) examination of the system of internal check, for both soundness in principle and effectiveness in operation

(b) examination and checking of accounting records and statements

(c) verification of assets and liabilities

(d) observation, inquiry, the making of statistical comparisons and such other measures as may be judged necessary.

Co-operation between Independent and Internal Auditor

(4) It will be evident from the preceding paragraph that the similarity between the means by which the independent auditor and the internal auditor carry out their respective duties is such that without co-operation between them there could be unnecessary duplication of work.

(5) Because of his experience acquired in public practice, the independent auditor may be of assistance in an advisory capacity in connection with the installation and subsequent operation of an internal audit; and in carrying out his duties he may derive much assistance from the internal auditor's intimate knowledge of the accounting system and technical knowledge of the business, particularly in connection with stock-in-trade, the physical existence of fixed assets, depreciation charges, the ascertainment of liabilities and the risks of fraud or misappropriation.

(6) There also exists considerable scope for mutual assistance between the two auditors in the planning of their respective audits. Where the independent auditor is satisfied that the internal auditor has adequately covered part of the work which the independent auditor would otherwise do he may be able to reduce the extent of his examination of detail; and consultation between the two auditors may enable the internal auditor to refrain from carrying out work which he would otherwise do but which, having regard to the examination which the independent auditor considers he must make in any event, would result in duplication. Examples of specific ways in which the work of the two auditors may be co-ordinated are:

(a) the independent auditor may be able to rely to a large extent on the internal auditor in determining whether the system of internal check is operating satisfactorily and in assessing the general reliability of the accounting records

(b) the programme of the internal auditor may include, by agreement, work which has the effect of giving direct assistance to the independent auditor by participating during the accounting period in matters such as cash counts and visits to branches, made either by the internal auditor alone or jointly with the independent auditor

(c) the internal auditor may arrange his programme at the end of the accounting period so that assistance is given to the independent auditor in connection with matters such as the confirmation of customers' accounts, verification of assets such as stock-in-trade and the preparation of audit working schedules required by the independent auditor for his records.

(7) The internal auditor's responsibility is to the management and he is in no sense a servant of the independent auditor. It follows therefore that the extent to which the internal auditor can so arrange his work as to be of specific assistance to the independent auditor will depend upon decisions of the management on the scope of the internal audit and the number of staff employed thereon. Consultation between the two auditors, and where necessary with the management, should, however, ensure that so far as is practicable the fullest possible assistance is available to the independent auditor.

Budget Representations to the Chancellor

We refer below to some of the principal points in recent pre-Budget representations to the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

The Law Society

THE Council of The Law Society has submitted to the Inland Revenue, in response to the Chancellor's request, a memorandum about the proposed capital gains and corporation taxes. The Council says it was assisted in preparing the memorandum by the Standing Committee of The Law Society on Revenue Law, the members of which are practising solicitors with specialized knowledge of taxation matters.

The Law Society would like the capital gains tax to be deferred until April 1966, even if April 1965 is still the dateline for valuation. The proposal ought to be examined closely, and the problems of administering the tax, both in the Inland Revenue and in the professions, also gone into. In any event, the tax should not apply to the so-called 'disposal' on death. The memorandum makes detailed recommendations about problems which are certainly very difficult and may well have been overlooked by the politicians. For one thing, 'the problems of incidence and accountability . . . in relation to trusts and trustees are capable of infinite variation'.

It is suggested that for an initial period of three years the scope of the capital gains tax be restricted to 'gains arising from the sales of businesses, investments and securities of all kinds, and freehold and leasehold property'. However, later in the memorandum, it is suggested that the sale of assets of a continuing business should not attract tax, likewise that partnership changes should not attract tax on goodwill except in so far as money is actually paid for it.

On the corporation tax, the Council's suggestions repeat the fears already expressed on all sides about particular aspects.

The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants

WE reproduce on another page extracts from a memorandum which has been submitted to the Chancellor of the Exchequer on behalf of The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants. The general tenor is an appeal for simplification with constructive suggestions as to how this may be achieved, bearing in mind that in the concept of taxation the word 'simple' is purely relative.

The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants

ALTHOUGH local authorities are not, as such, exempted from taxes, they enjoy scope for a good deal of manœuvre in relation to income tax. They can, for instance, set off interest paid against profits from trading undertakings. How are they going to fare when the new corporation tax and the new capital gains tax are introduced? The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants has called for a review of the principle of the liability to tax of municipal authorities. If these authorities are to be charged to corporation tax, which of course will be distinct from income tax, then it is suggested that the rate should be lower in their case. The Institute would prefer that authorities should be exempt altogether, in view of the essentially social nature of their operations.

Capital gains accrue to local authorities in dealings etc. with land for development purposes. The Institute suggests that if capital gains tax is to be imposed on these gains then in effect this would be levied on the betterment which the authority itself has created. There is certainly a good deal to be said for exempting local authorities from this tax.

The National Association of British Manufacturers

THE National Association of British Manufacturers has followed up its memorandum on the corporation and capital gains taxes with a further memorandum to the Chancellor of the Exchequer on his coming Budget. Two further points are made about corporation tax: first that existing capital allowances should be stepped up in order to compensate, in terms of total relief, for the fall in the rate of tax charged on company profits as such. Secondly, provision should be made for exempting dividends from income tax if they are paid out of tax-free reserves; otherwise there will be double taxation.

The Association thinks that when shares in private companies pass on a death, there should be one common method of valuing them for estate duty purposes, whether the deceased had control of the company or not. However, the taxpayer should have a choice of taking individual asset values or a fair market value of the business as a whole. Moreover, shares in private companies should qualify for a lower rate of duty. The special abatement for industrial assets should, in the Association's view, be extended to all business assets.

The memorandum contains the novel suggestion that taxpayers should be able to take out a life policy in favour of the Inland Revenue, the proceeds being set off against estate duty liability, the premium being allowed as a deductible expense for income tax or corporation tax. The present limits on allowable remuneration for controlling directors should, in the view of the Association, be revised upwards in consequence of the rise in rates of remuneration generally.

The Association repeats an earlier suggestion that the tax on heavy hydrocarbons be withdrawn, as this imposes a burden on productive industry, particularly where it uses oil-fired furnaces. On the other hand, the view is expressed that there should be a further shift in emphasis from direct taxation to indirect taxation, which is more flexible as an economic regulator and more effective in inhibiting spending. If purchase tax is to stay, some of its anomalies should be removed, and the rates made into multiples of each other, each of them being a simple fraction, rather than a percentage which is difficult to calculate. The memorandum asks for simplification of the method of imposing the charge, in order to avoid the waste of time involved in charging each individual article.

The import surcharge has brought increases in manufacturing costs and the Association asks that it be confined to fully manufactured goods, or better still withdrawn. The export rebate introduced in the second Budget is regarded as insufficient. The rebate should not itself be subject to tax in the hands of the recipient. Other indirect taxes are suggested as being worthy of inclusion in the rebates, including for instance the employer's contribution to social welfare. Better still, the Association thinks, is an international agreement for direct export subsidies where a country's balance of payments makes these necessary.

The London Stock Exchange

THE Council of the Stock Exchange have replied very briefly to the Bank of England's invitation to it to submit detailed comments about the new taxes. It points out that the stock exchange is a market place, whose efficiency depends on turnover; the less the turnover the less the efficiency, including the ability to raise money for industry and commerce. The Council is therefore opposed to the threatened capital gains tax. If it is to come, nevertheless, then the tax should be at a low flat rate, gradually reducing over subsequent years 'as is the case with gifts inter vivos'. Profits or losses on the redemption of a fixed interest security having no equity content should be excluded from the operation of the tax.

Trades Union Congress

THE memorandum from the Trades Union Congress is, as one might expect, more optimistic in tone. The view is expressed that it would be premature to initiate deflationary measures in the belief that consumer demand would divert resources from exports. Defence expenditure should, however, be scrutinized, with early examination of employment opportunities for workers who might be displaced. Not surprisingly the memorandum says that the taxation threatened for the next Budget is 'rightly conceived on grounds of social equity': capital gains are an acknowledgment of 'an obvious loophole in our fiscal system'. Again there is the remark about enjoying 'what is virtually a tax-free source of income'.

Weekly Notes

REVIEWING PRICES AND INCOMES

THE second stage of Mr Brown's efforts to resolve the continuing cost-prices spiral, which has dominated the United Kingdom economic scene for over a decade, has been achieved. The White Paper entitled Machinery of Prices and Incomes Policy (Cmnd 2577) discusses how the Government proposes to supervise increases in prices and incomes and to judge whether or not their behaviour is in the national interest.

Two boards, termed divisions, will be set up, one for prices and the other for incomes. The hope is expressed that all the parties concerned will give these boards their full co-operation in any inquiry, but, if necessary, the Government is prepared to endow them with statutory powers to enforce such co-operation. The divisions will each consist of an independent chairman, a number of independent members, a business man and a trade unionist. Some of the members may be part-time and, in addition to these permanent appointments to the boards, panels of business men and trade unionists will be enlisted to assist with particular inquiries. Each division will be able to sit in two or more sections under the chairmanship of independent members. They will also have their own staffs, including accountants, experts on industrial relations, economists and statisticians.

The Government will retain direct responsibility for all references to the Prices Review Division, but the division will decide its own procedure and the extent to which it will sit in public. Any evidence of a confidential nature, the publication of which would damage the legitimate business interests of the firm concerned, will not be published. It is stated that two to three months should be the maximum for the length of an inquiry. Much the same principles will underlie the operations of the Incomes Review Division. The lack of co-operation of the trade unions with the now defunct National Incomes Commission is recalled in the statement that 'it is hoped that in all cases the parties directly concerned will be willing to have claims brought before the division'.

The sting is left to the final sentence where it is noted that the Government 'intends to give the voluntary method every chance of proving that it can be made to work'. It will resort to 'other methods only if they were convinced that the voluntary method had failed'.

FRANCE TO PAY IN GOLD

PRESIDENT DE GAULLE'S call for a reform of the International Monetary System at his Press conference in Paris recently has been followed by the announcement that France will settle its payments in gold. The French Finance Minister, M d'Estaing, called on all countries to follow suit when he made the announcement last week.

A number of factors have brought about the current French attitude about the international monetary system. France is eager to raise the prestige of the franc to the same level as the dollar and the pound and this is not likely to be easy to bring about so long as the dollar and the pound are the principal international exchange currencies. President de Gaulle is also anxious to discourage the control of French industry by American companies, which means discouraging American investment in France. This investment is sustained by the United States operating at times with a deficit on its balance of payments. This deficit could only be maintained when it arises, just as the deficit in the United Kingdom's balance of payments can only be maintained, by foreigners remaining willing to hold dollars or pounds as the case may be. From the French point of view, a modern variant of the gold standard would neatly raise the prestige of the franc and reduce United States investment in Western Europe.

The French Finance Minister did not call specifically for a return to the gold standard, but he returned to the point made in the previous week by General de Gaulle that countries should not run balance of payments deficits by obliging other countries to hold their currencies. France is now in fact asking for the substance, if not the precise form, of a gold standard.

TRADE RETURNS AND PROSPECTS

THE January overseas trade returns proved somewhat disappointing – the crude gap rising from £67 million in December to £83 million. Even using the adjusted balance of payments figure calculated by the Board of Trade, the deficit rose from £19 million to £34 million. Quite apart from reading too much into one month's figures it can hardly be doubted that the record December exports figure owed something to the delays in the docks which had affected the returns for the two previous months. Taking the three months November to January together, exports averaged £378 million per month, or 2 per cent above the corresponding average for the preceding three months.

Average imports for the latest quarter were £476 million, equal to 2 per cent below the average for the August to October period. While the effects of the 15 per cent import surcharge are not immediately evident, the reduction in imports of chemicals and semi-manufactures suggests, in the words of the Board of Trade, that 'the charge has had some effect in the last month or two'.

The immediate prospect for exports, i.e. the assessment of markets for the next four months, is quite bright. According to the latest industrial trends survey of the Federation of British Industries, nearly one-third of the 804 firms reporting on export prospects are more optimistic than they were four months ago. On the other hand, the same thinking is not so evident in the respondent firms' – 1,060 of them – assessment of conditions nearer home. An increasing proportion of the respondents report rising costs and there is a widespread belief that labour shortages, in particular of skilled labour, will exert a restrictive effect on the future rate of expansion. Equally disturbing is the slight reduction in the rate of growth of new capital investment orders, although according to the latest industrial survey of the National Institute of Economic and Social Research, the largest prospective increases in output are expected from firms manufacturing heavy capital goods.

INVESTMENT TRUST ACCOUNTS

LED by a nucleus of progressive companies, more and more boards have become convinced that it is right to make the considerable effort to keep their shareholders informed – or at least that it does not pay to leave them in half ignorance.

Since its formation in 1955 the Society of Investment Analysts has added its contribution to those of the London Stock Exchange and the financial Press towards establishing the much more open attitude which now exists, and on Wednesday the Society announced a series of studies in which it proposes to be more specific. The first, now published, concerns investment trust companies; reports on other industrial and commercial sectors will be added gradually. Although not all reports will be in precisely the same form, they will have one feature in common. For each industry the Society's Corporate Information Committee will examine the standard of corporate reporting by the companies concerned, and will re-examine year by year the progress made towards a higher standard of information for their shareholders.

The Society decided that its first study should deal with the accounts of investment trust companies principally because investment trusts themselves need the best possible information from the companies in which they invest. They have therefore the strongest motive for being frank, complete and prompt when informing their own shareholders.

Because of the relative homogeneity of investment trust companies, the Corporate Information Committee has provided with this first report a specimen set of accounts and interim statements. These specimen accounts have been based on the best current practice as a suggestion of the layout and content at which investment trust companies might aim in their own accounts in future. The accounts of 265 investment trust companies with assets totalling over £3,000 million were examined in the course of preparing the report. Among the points regarded as important by the Committee are the disclosure of the dollar premium, the historical record, and an analysis of investments by sector, by country and by company in adequate detail.

This interesting study by the Society of Investment Analysts will be reviewed in greater detail in a subsequent issue.

PARLIAMENTARY QUESTIONS

THE position of charitable trust funds which are effectively frozen because of uncertainty or because of the extinction of the purposes for which they were originally created, is to be raised in Parliament shortly.

Mr Jeremy Thorpe (Liberal, North Devon) has tabled a question for the Home Secretary for March 9th, urging that steps should be taken to enable such funds to be used for the public benefit.

Mr Joel Barnett (Labour, Heywood and Royton) is to ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on March 9th what is the practice of the Inland Revenue, under section 29 (5) of the Income Tax Act, 1952, with regard to the raising of assessments on income derived by non-residents from money invested in banks and other financial institutions which do not deduct income tax at source.

Sir Cyril Osborne (Conservative, Louth) has tabled a question for March 4th suggesting that in view of the fact that directors in large companies own only a small proportion of the capital and tend to become self-perpetuating, the President of the Board of Trade should introduce legislation to reform the Companies Act and make compulsory the calling for nominations to boards at the end of each year.

A Board of Trade statement on the progress which has been made by the inspectors appointed to investigate the affairs of Rolls Razor Ltd is being sought. Mr Frederick Bellenger (Labour, Bassetlaw) has put down a question on the subject for March 4th.

A question as to what progress has been made towards finding a permanent site for the location of the new London Business School is to be asked of the Secretary of State for Education and Science on March 18th.

IRISH INCOME TAX

THE Republic of Ireland still uses the Income Tax Act, 1918, which was passed by the United Kingdom Parliament. However, in the Republic, as here, the 1918 Act has been subject to numerous amending Acts. In the Republic they have now achieved the number of fifty-five, so that obviously consolidation would be an improvement. The Income Tax Bill, 1964, was published earlier this month and incorporates the Acts from 1918 to 1964, as well as various adaptation orders. An explanatory memorandum accompanies the Bill, and states that the Bill is being circulated with a view to affording interested parties an opportunity to examine its provisions and satisfy themselves that it makes no change in the law. The memorandum also invites suggestions for improvement, these to be sent in by the end of April. We hope to return to the Bill in a later issue.

The provision of double initial allowances available in respect of expenditure incurred between December 14th, 1961, and March 31st, 1965, is to be extended to cover expenditure incurred before March 31st, 1968. This will be done through the coming Finance Bill for 1965. The extension is complementary to the continuation until March 1968 of industrial adaptation grants operated by An Foras Tionscal. The tax relief is for expenditure incurred, the grants for expenditure approved, in the relevant period.

FOTHERGALE CO LTD - VII

LAST Tuesday's episode of this B.B.C.-2 series was devoted to the problems involved in raising capital for a smaller-sized firm.

The manufacturers of 'Castaway' shirts are going through a phase of rapid expansion of output and sales and, in consequence, are suffering from a shortage of working capital. Any qualified accountant who

CHAPTER 264

THE chairman has been very ill recently. He got soaked watching his schoolgirl granddaughter playing hockey and in his excitement neglected changing into dry clothes until hours afterwards; the result – pneumonia. Fortunately, his tough constitution saved him, but it was a near thing.

He sent me a message to visit him one afternoon. I found him sitting up in a wheelchair, be-rugged to the chest, in a warm corner of his big drawing-room. His face was sunken and lined and his hands were spread out red and bony before him, but his grin was as cheerful as ever. He perked up under my congratulations ('our generation was damn tough, my boy') and asked how business was going. He wanted to know how often we were turning our stock-in-trade and how cumulative sales compared with last year's figures. That rugged generation of his might be short of accounting finesse, but it knew that if the sales were maintained properly there was little need to worry. It was an approach of sublime simplicity.

He inquired next about staff changes: who had retired, or been rotated, or got married? He knows nearly everyone we employ and his interest is paternal and genuine. True, people may slack, or drink too much and get rowdy on Saturday nights, but he accepts that sort of thing as a matter of course. The point is that they're 'his people' and therefore it's his responsibility to look after them.

Then he asked with a humorous gleam in his eye about my own latest 'hobby-horse'. Out in our Men's Accessories Department one morning buying fur-lined driving-gloves as a Christmas present, I'd noticed how rarely prices were marked clearly on the goods displayed. Time and again customers had to look for staff to ask how much this or that cost, and they'd question, demur and pass on to something else. The waste of time was appalling; our vaunted productivity was a negative quantity; we were losing business hand over fist.

Apparently the departmental buyer and the sales manager had cooked up this beauty between them. Our prices for de-luxe articles like silk scarves and fancy waistcoats and so on had somewhat naturally been slightly inflated for the Christmas trade, so these mental giants decided not to disclose figures too freely; if they did, they reasoned, customers might compare them unfavourably with our competitors' lines – item by item – and go elsewhere. On the other hand, hurrying customers would buy what they were seeking if the prices weren't too outrageous on inquiry; if they were deterred by seeing the docket price prematurely, they'd be lost to us. So ran the argument.

After some fruitless efforts to convert the sales manager to a basically less imbecile manoeuvre, I raised the point at a weekly executive meeting. Everyone joined heatedly in the controversy – particularly those who had the least knowledge or responsibility – and tempers were frayed; especially the S.M.'s as pricing is his own special pet prerogative.

The chairman listened with a worried expression. 'You've been treading on a few corns, you know,' he said slowly. 'Chaps don't like being shown up. They resent what they regard as outside criticism. Better be careful.'

I assured him that my criticisms had been constructive; my intentions excellent; my sole aim the company's best interests; but he shook his head. 'Good intentions can do a lot of harm sometimes,' he said tiredly. 'Somebody has got his knife into you, you know; he wants you out of here. What'll happen to you when I'm gone?'

He wouldn't say any more; indeed, he'd said more than enough – his well-intentioned warning is responsible for my ulcer. In the past I've tended to look on our differences of opinion on executive level as a sign of healthy mental alertness; it seems to be reverting to nineteenth-century tyranny if helpful comments can cost an accountant his job. Apparently the man in industry is as vulnerable as the auditor.

is worth his salt would be alert to this problem and could, we hope, offer a reasonably uncomplicated explanation to his directors – but the unfortunate chairman of Fothergale's has it wrapped up for him under the high-sounding title of 'Domar effect' when he hears about it from Tom Rudyard, the firm's commercial director.

It is a pity that this series has devoted so much of its time to needlessly trying to 'blind us with science' – to the extent that it seems to have preferred, whenever possible, the unfamiliar theoretical approach to the more commonplace explanation that might have found favour with practising managers.

Raising additional capital is a very real problem that is close to the experience of many small companies and the time available for this aspect of Fothergale's problems could have been used to greater effect. Not a word of explanation did we hear about the finance houses and similar institutions whose very raison d'être is the provision of finance for go-ahead companies in the Fothergale category. Why doesn't Rudyard pay a visit to the firm's auditors to get a second opinion on its problems? He might learn something to his advantage.

Steel Company of Wales

THE Steel Company of Wales, from which this week's reprint is taken, was formed in 1947, nationalized in 1951, returned to private shareholders' ownership in 1957 and now stands to be nationalized again.

Sir Julian Pode, F.C.A., the chairman, suggests in his annual review that the economic facts of life have caught up with a company formed under special circumstances – the development and modernization of flat-rolled steel in South Wales after the Second World War. When the company first achieved full production, Sir Julian points out, it was with the aid of a considerable labour force recruited in the face of many competing demands.

Wage rates were high and the number of men employed was large. The top priority was production. As a result, the company is now faced with a 'most difficult situation'. A considerable reduction in manpower from the present level of 24,000 must be achieved 'in the interests of economy' and at the same time output must be maintained.

'We have a considerable problem of productivity in our works', Sir Julian admits, partly due to the fact that original manning was conditioned by an urgent need to achieve full production as quickly as possible and because new techniques in production are employing plant of considerably greater output.

Strike

The accounts under review cover a period in which the works were brought to a standstill for about six weeks by a strike. As a result, the tonnage of steel plates, steel sheets and tinplate produced was down from 2,007,000 tons to 1,825,000 and turnover from £139 million to £127 million.

That position led to a pre-tax loss of £1,240,311 compared with a previous year profit of £4,280,464. Surplus production of flat-rolled products created severe competition and increasing demands for superior quality caused considerable increase in costs. The tinplate trade suffered from a rise in the price of tin from £916 to £1,500 a ton during the company's financial year, with increases in prices of tinplate lagging well behind the rise in price of the metal.

One of the legacies of the early form which the company took and the method of its financing, is the heavy loan position, but Sir Julian considers that the cash flow arising from depreciation and retained future profits in excess of capital expenditure should be sufficient to reduce the company's short-term indebtedness.

Modern Problem

The chairman's comments on the productivity and manpower problems facing the company are reflected in the 'production' and 'profits and dividends' statements included in the reprint. These show the building up of production and earnings to a 1959–60 peak and the struggle there has been since then to push both production and earnings higher.

The past year's loss was exceptional to the extent that it turned on the six weeks' strike but, as Sir Julian says, the loss is a 'stern reminder of the vulnerability of modern large scale production'. The company is also faced with a modern problem – that of reducing the manpower cost of production in a period of sharply rising wage costs.

High Standard

Shareholders in The Steel Company of Wales may not have a particularly inspiring set of accounts to read this year but at least they allow shareholders to see right into the business and into its problems. The standard of company reporting in the steel industry is undoubtedly high. The United Steel Companies' accounts, for example, have been adopted as a form of account presentation by a number of companies well beyond the steel industry.

A Taxation Equalisation Account
Taxation has been equalised on the basis of income tax at 7s. 9d. in the £ and profits tax at 15%.

B Debenture Stocks
Both Stocks are secured under Trust Deeds and are redeemable at £102½.

C Stocks
Stocks are valued at cost, with the exception of certain items of insignificant amount which are valued at estimated realisable price, where this is below cost.

D Subsidiary Companies
In view of the insignificant amounts involved no group accounts are submitted. The trade of one subsidiary was taken over by the parent company as from 1st October, 1962; the profits of this subsidiary for all previous accounting periods have been dealt with in the accounts of the Company. The other subsidiary has not traded since its incorporation.

E Commitments for Capital Expenditure
The outstanding capital expenditure sanctioned by the Board to date amounts to approximately £11,000,000 (£4,000,000).

CITY NOTES

THE round of merger and new issue operations is helping to give the stock-markets a semblance of activity. The punters are out in force for new share offers and the institutions are being quite liberally served with fixed interest stock placings. The Courtaulds-Reed bid for Wall Paper Manufacturers highlighted the merger scene but agreed mergers such as the Albright & Wilson and Associated Chemical operation, rather than take-over bids and battles, are the order of the day.

Meanwhile, the halting recovery in equities continues to be a spasmodic affair and the uninspiring January trade figures were enough to turn an apparently firm market easier. Talk of a 'clash' between Mr George Brown and Mr James Callaghan on economic policy may be wide of the mark but it has reminded the market that there is a Budget not so very far off and that the Budget may be used to draw off spending power.

Lord Cromer's warning on the dangers of too high a level of Government spending has also helped to bring home the Budget point.

Inland Revenue Extra-statutory Concessions

In Operation at December 31st, 1963

The following additions to, and deletions from, the list of extra-statutory concessions are reproduced by permission of the Controller of H.M. Stationery Office from the 107th Report of the Board of Inland Revenue for the year ended March 31st, 1964. The concessions described below are of general application, but it must be borne in mind that in a particular case there may be special circumstances which will require to be taken into account in considering the application of the concession.

ADDITIONS

INCOME TAX

42. Industrial buildings allowances: private roads on industrial trading estates

Where an owner of an industrial trading estate has incurred capital expenditure on the provision on the estate of private roads which remain in his occupation, and he is not himself carrying on a trade which would qualify him for industrial buildings allowances in respect of the expenditure, he is treated in practice as if he were carrying on a qualifying trade and so entitled to the allowances if all the lessees occupying the premises on the trading estate are themselves carrying on qualifying trades.

43. Retirement annuity relief

Under sections 22–23, Finance Act, 1956, an individual who is taxable in respect of earned income from a trade, profession, vocation or non-pensionable employment may be allowed a deduction, from his net earnings for any year, of the amount of any premium he pays in that year under an approved contract for a life annuity on retirement.

In general, section 23 (1) restricts the allowable deduction to 10 per cent of the net earnings from the trade, etc., for the year in which the premium is paid, with an overriding limit of £750. (For persons born in or before 1915 these limits are increased; the maximum percentage is 15 per cent of net earnings, up to a limit of £1,125 and this applies in the case of persons born in 1907 or before.) Section 23 (2) provides that where the qualifying premium paid in any year cannot be allowed, or cannot be wholly allowed, as a deduction from that year's net earnings solely because it exceeds the relevant percentage of that year's net earnings, the unallowed portion shall be carried forward to the next year and treated as if it were a qualifying premium paid in that year, and so on for succeeding years, if necessary.

Where for any year the overriding limit (e.g. £750) applicable in the particular case is exceeded solely by reason of unrelieved premiums brought forward from earlier years, the position in strict law is that the excess over the overriding limit cannot be carried forward to subsequent years and relief is therefore lost. In practice, however, an excess arising in 1963–64 or a subsequent year will be allowed to be carried forward.

44. Tithe redemption annuity paid by a trader

Under section 31 of the Finance Act, 1963, five-sixths of a payment on account of a tithe redemption annuity is deductible from the income of the payer for the year of assessment in which it is payable.

Where a person pays tithe redemption annuity in respect of premises used for the purposes of his trade, profession or vocation, but his income is not sufficient to enable relief to be given in respect of the whole of the amount so deductible, the amount in respect of which relief cannot be given is treated as though it were a trading loss available for carry forward under section 342 of the Income Tax Act, 1952.

45. Maintenance expenses of owner-occupied farms not carried on on a commercial basis

Where the owner-occupier of a farm in the United Kingdom makes a loss but is precluded by section 20, Finance Act, 1960, from claiming relief against the tax on his general income because his farming is not carried on on a commercial basis and with a view to the realization of profits, he may claim the same relief for the cost of maintenance, repairs and insurance of his agricultural land (i.e. land, houses or other buildings occupied wholly or mainly for the purpose of husbandry) as can be claimed under section 313, Income Tax Act, 1952, by a landlord of agricultural land. For this purpose one-third of the relevant expenditure on a farm-house is regarded as agricultural and two-thirds as domestic.

PROFITS TAX

3. Interest, in excess of investment income, paid by one overseas trade corporation to another in the same profits tax group

Where interest is paid by one overseas trade corporation to another and both companies are members of the same profits tax group, the interest, in so far as it exceeds the investment income of the paying company and therefore cannot be deducted in computing the profits of that company, is excluded in computing the profits of the recipient company.

DELETIONS

INCOME TAX

2. Unoccupied land.

4. Unworked mills and factories.

6. Basis of assessment of new and altered owner-occupied property first occupied on or after April 1st, 1956.

9. Management expenses (as amended in 104th Report).

These concessions have lapsed as a result of the abolition of Schedule A tax on owner-occupied property in the Finance Act, 1963.

Corporation Tax

SIR, – So far as we can gather, after the introduction of the proposed corporation tax, companies will no longer be able to retain the income tax which they deduct on payment of dividend to shareholders.

This no doubt accounts for the recent spate of increased dividends, as it is clear that it will cost a company no more to pay, say, a 10 per cent dividend now than it would to pay 7½ per cent after the Budget.

When this fact becomes more widely appreciated it is likely that there will be a sudden stampede to pay bigger and better dividends before the axe falls.

But what about past earnings lying in general reserve and/or undistributed profit and loss balances? Income tax has already been paid on these profits and they are thus immediately available for distribution without payment to the Inland Revenue of further tax if paid as dividends now or at least before the Budget.

This in itself would seem to encourage directors to distribute up to the hilt, regardless of the liquid position and other factors which normally affect such decisions. After all, there is no point in paying income tax twice on the same profits if it can possibly be avoided and, accordingly, company directors could not be blamed for taking the necessary steps to secure the best possible deal for their shareholders.

All this, of course, adds to the inflationary spiral, but in this instance, fortunately, Mr Callaghan has the remedy in his own hands. Up to the present he has more or less declined to add very much to his statement of December 8th on practically all aspects of corporation tax, but, in my opinion, it is high time he came out into the open and let us have his assurance now, that tax deducted from dividends, paid out of profits which have already been exposed to income tax/profits tax, may be retained by the payers no matter when the distribution actually takes place.

Yours faithfully,
MACSICCAR.

Tuition by Post

SIR, – I trust that you will allow me to reply to the unjustifiable criticisms made by Mr Pember in your issue of February 6th, concerning correspondence tuition.

Mr Pember claims that there is an inherent weakness in postal tuition, namely, the lack of regular hours of study such as are imposed by attendance at college.

I submit that the attendance of a student is irrelevant when considering the tutorial merits of oral and correspondence tuition. It is the quality of tuition on the one hand and the willingness of the student to learn on the other. These latter factors are often ignored by critics of correspondence tuition although they are a common factor both to oral and correspondence tuition.

Mr Pember feels that it is difficult to set aside a regular period each week when domestic and other distractions may upset the best laid schemes of study.

Once again this is a common factor to both methods of tuition. The oral student must work at home just as hard as the postal student if he is to understand the subject taught to him at his last class. He must do his homework as well as preparing for the subjects to be taught at the next class. The crux of the problem is the willingness of the student to find time and ignore the distractions about him.

Mr Pember feels that a student who is not up to standard struggles on. A good teacher could advise such a struggler to change to a less exacting course more in keeping with his modest abilities.

This is a generalization of rare occurrence. Of course there is the odd student who is not suitable, but he really has to be a dunce to justify throwing away his future career.

I do not believe it is the function of a teacher to discourage the less intelligent student. In fact the struggler may be in difficulty due to the poor quality of the tuition. If Mr Pember's remarks were justified, surely thousands of articled clerks a year (who fail the Institute's examinations) would be persuaded by their teachers to lower their sights and remain in hum-drum jobs for the rest of their lives.

The criticism that the fees are heavy do not stand the test. The fees for a correspondence course for full tuition to final stage of three accountancy bodies is set out below:

	Fee £	Length of course Years	Annual Fee £ s d
The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales	57	5	11 8 0
The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants	46	4	11 10 0
The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants	49	4	12 5 0
Average fee			11 14 4

I have ignored the cost of textbooks since they are common to both methods of tuition.

Let us compare the annual fee of a correspondence course with the costs of attending evening classes.

Assume a nominal fee of £2 for three terms, say thirty weeks, at a technical college. To this must be added the cost of eating out plus travelling expenses, say 10s per week, the annual cost to the student is as follows (the cost of subsidizing the course by the taxpayer is ignored):

Cost of subsidized tuition	2
Cost of travelling and eating: 30 × 10s	15
	£17 per year

Let the figures speak for themselves!

To assert that a student finishes with little more than a complete set of notes with little hope of comprehending them fully is ludicrous to say the least.

I agree that at the end of the course the correspondence student finishes with a complete set of notes and how useful they are too. They are superior in all ways to the notes an oral student compiles after each class, for they are written by qualified and experienced tutors and there are no loosely worded oral statements to be confused or misunderstood.

If a student has difficulty in comprehending the notes, he is encouraged to write to the Directors of Studies with his problem. It must be remembered, however, that his comprehension will be tested continually throughout the course by the planned tutorial service rendered by the college upon submission of tests.

The very fact that most correspondence colleges are commercial undertakings is one of the safeguards to the student. It ensures that a college is sensitive to students' opinions.

It is unjustifiable to assert that correspondence colleges would not seek to reduce their student intake. It is business suicide not to check eligibility. The success of the college thrives on the goodwill created by responsible advice, which ensures that the student is well cared for.

Of course we refuse enrolments where they are not justified. It is bad policy by any standards to act in a manner detrimental to the student's interests.

With regard to the remarks concerning failures and wastage, Mr Pember implies that these two factors do not seem to exist at oral institutions. Of course they do! And the two most important factors which influence these phenomena are:

(1) Poor quality of tuition.
(2) The student's weakness in persevering with his studies.

To imply that wastage and failure is completely due to the correspondence method of tuition is ill informed. They apply to all methods of tuition. In fact, according to the Crowther Report, high wastage and failure rates exist in the National Certificate Courses.

In one survey of all students entering National Certificate Courses without exemption from the first or subsequent years only 23 per cent eventually obtained O.N.C. and 10 per cent H.N.C.

Mr Peterson's article (January 23rd issue) took a completely objective view of the part correspondence tuition can play in the field of further education. It is unfortunate that Mr Pember's remarks were not equally objective.

D.C.F. and Neddy

SIR, – It seems regrettable that The Accountant should use its editorial space (February 6th) to denigrate the National Economic Development Council booklet Investment Appraisal. If a major cause of the slow rate of economic growth in this country is, as the booklet suggests, a failure on the part of industry to evaluate sensibly the benefits – particularly the tax benefits – of investment proposals, then surely the N.E.D.C. cannot do better than devote a part of its resources to pointing this out.

To use such expressions as 'The New Alchemy' and 'pseudo-scientific projections', suggests that the use of discounted cash flow techniques is nothing more than a gimmick. I would suggest that failure to use after-tax D.C.F. techniques cannot be defended. This failure is associated with the myth that D.C.F. techniques require guesses about the future. Every management makes guesses about the future when investing capital. D.C.F. simply provides a means of sensibly evaluating these guesses.

Yours faithfully,

Brighouse, Yorks. N. F. WOOD, F.C.A.

[Our correspondent seems to have misconstrued the intention of our leading article which was certainly not to cast doubt upon the usefulness of D.C.F. Indeed, we referred readers to articles which have appeared in past issues of The Accountant on the subject, as well as to a booklet which gives a clearer exposition of it than was provided by the N.E.D.C. report. Our criticism was that the N.E.D.C. should not devote scarce resources to publicizing well-known management techniques, but rather to analysing the more fundamental problems of the national economy which, in our understanding, was the purpose of its establishment. – Editor.]

THE ASSOCIATION OF CERTIFIED AND CORPORATE ACCOUNTANTS

BUDGET REPRESENTATIONS

Extracts from the memorandum recently submitted to the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

TAXATION SIMPLIFICATION

The Council desires yet again to stress the urgent need for simplification of the taxation system. The main proposals which the Council has put forward in connection with simplification and which it most strongly brings to your notice are as follows:

Recommendations

(i) The abolition of the present concept of a standard rate and the substitution of a 'withholding rate' for the sole purpose of making deduction of tax at source from annual payments and dividends.

(ii) The abolition of the present concept of years of assessment in favour of years of income.

(iii) For individuals – a single graduated scale of tax to combine income tax and surtax.

(iv) For corporate bodies – a single tax levied at a special rate.

(v) Self-assessment by the taxpayer.

(vi) That a Taxation Simplification Committee be set up, consisting of members of the accountancy and legal professions, together with representatives of the Board of Inland Revenue, charged with the preparation of a specimen Income Tax Bill designed to replace the existing legislation relating to income tax, surtax and profits tax with a new system of direct taxation appropriate to modern conditions.

(vii) That a permanent body consisting of representatives of the Board of Inland Revenue and members of the accountancy and legal professions be established to keep under review all legislation on direct taxation and all matters of practice with a view to reducing anomalies to a minimum, ensuring that where practices are established they are soundly based and are fair to all sides. Until approved by this body, the Council believes that no practice should be treated as an established practice.

MATTERS RELATING TO THE PRESENT TAXATION SYSTEM

Taxability of Net Income

It is the Council's considered view that a taxpayer should not be taxed on a sum in excess of the net total income in any year and that section 341 should be widened to give relief for all losses of a taxpayer from whatever source they may arise.

Recommendation

That the provisions of section 341 of the Income Tax Act, 1952, be extended to provide for relief against all other income of the taxpayer in respect of any loss or deficiency sustained from a chargeable source.

Basis of Assessment – Schedule D – Cases III, IV and V

The case of Hart v. Sangster ((1957) 37 T.C. 231) concerning bank interest showed that many assessments under Case III should be made on an actual basis if the law is strictly applied. The layman, however, seldom understands all the complications of the existing system and the Council suggests that the retention of the present law with its anomalies in the opening and closing years is both unnecessary and inequitable.

The treatment of dividends, interest and other income from abroad is also complicated. If such income is receivable direct from overseas by a resident of the United Kingdom it is normally taxed on the preceding-year basis under the appropriate case of Schedule D, but if it is received through a paying agent in this country, different rules apply and the taxpayer is assessed on the income of the year of receipt.

The Council is of opinion that over the whole period of a source of income, tax should be levied on the actual income and not on some figure which may be either greater or less than that income. If this were done, there would be the added benefit that the double taxation anomaly caused by reason of the commencement and cessation provisions of Schedule D would not arise.

Recommendation

That assessments under Cases III, IV and V of Schedule D be based on the actual income of the year of assessment.

Amendment of Schedule E Expenses Rule

The Council draws attention to the widespread condemnation of the rule in paragraph 7 of the Ninth Schedule of the Income Tax Act, 1952.

Recommendation

That legislation be introduced immediately, amending the provisions in paragraph 7 of the Ninth Schedule of the Income Tax Act, 1952, to permit the deduction of all expenses reasonably incurred in the appropriate performance of the duty of the office or employment as recommended in paragraph 140 of the Final Report of the Royal Commission on the Taxation of Profits and Income.

Claims for Error or Mistake

The Council has drawn attention on a previous occasion to deficiencies in the provisions of section 66 of the Income Tax Act, 1952, which purports to grant relief where, as a result of an error or mistake on the part of a taxpayer, an excessive assessment has been made. Attention has been given to one aspect of this matter in the Income Tax Management Act, 1964, but nevertheless the Council is advised that the section is defective in the following respects:

(a) No relief is available where the error or mistake causes an excessive assessment, not in the year for which the claim would be competent, but in a subsequent year.

(b) In many cases relief is unobtainable in respect of errors in claims for capital allowances.

(c) The section denies relief to a taxpayer who accepts an assessment based on 'generally prevailing practice', where the practice is subsequently found to be mistaken. It must not be forgotten that such practices are established as the result of decisions taken by the Board of Inland Revenue. The taxpayer is not consulted when these decisions are taken, but it is considered wrong that he should be bound by having conformed with practices established in this way, when, as is sometimes the case, they are subsequently overruled by the Courts.

Recommendations

(i) That section 66 of the Income Tax Act, 1952, be redrafted to provide relief in all cases of error or mistake.

(ii) That the proviso to section 66 concerning 'generally prevailing practice' be deleted or alternatively that no practice should be described as 'generally prevailing' until it has been agreed by a Committee consisting of representatives of the Board of Inland Revenue together with members of the accountancy and legal professions.

Amendment of Surtax Direction Legislation

The Council considers that section 245 of the Income Tax Act, 1952, which provides for surtax directions to be made where in the opinion of the Special Commissioners a reasonable part of the income of a controlled company has not been distributed, introduces a penal element which is out of place in this legislation. The Commissioners must, in the course of operating these provisions, determine to their own satisfaction which is a reasonable distribution, and the Council strongly recommends that they be permitted to make a direction in respect of that part of the undistributed income only.

Recommendation

That legislation be introduced whereby the charge to surtax on the income of controlled companies should not be made on an amount exceeding that which the Commissioners regard as a reasonable distribution.

Schedule D, Case VIII

Paragraph 17 of the Fourth Schedule of the Finance Act, 1963, prohibits the deduction of repairs expenditure in certain circumstances. The wording used in the paragraph is to some extent a reproduction of the wording in section 332 of the Income Tax Act, 1952, but subsection (2) of this latter section is not reproduced. In the majority of cases this will lead to no serious objection, but it would seem that the judgment in re Pelly's Will Trust ([1955] 3 All E.R. 483; 34 A.T.C. 274), has been overruled. A life-tenant, therefore, who incurs repair expenditure which is subsequently reimbursed by trustees will not be able to claim deduction of the expenditure in his Case VIII assessment. The Council considers that where repairs to property are incurred out of trust capital and the life-tenant enjoys an income from the property, the trustees should be permitted to recover tax on the amount of the expenditure so incurred.

Recommendation

That where trustees bear expenditure out of capital in respect of repairs etc. on property from which a life-tenant derives rents, the trustees should be permitted to recover tax on the expenditure so incurred to the extent of any Case VIII assessment made on the net rent received by the life-tenant.

Limitation of Content of Annual Finance Bills

The Council considers that the time has now come for Finance Bills to be restricted to such matters as tax rates and allowances. Detailed amendment of the law should be enacted by means of separate Taxation Bills accompanied by explanatory memoranda.

The Council is mindful of the example of the Income Tax Management Act, 1964, which dealt with numerous administrative points much more effectively than would have been the case had these points been included in a Finance Bill.

Recommendations

(i) That the contents of Finance Bills should relate only to rates of tax and allowances.

(ii) That Taxation Bills should be introduced annually for the purpose of dealing with detailed amendment of the law.

(iii) That Taxation Bills and any amendments thereto be accompanied by explanatory memoranda setting out in simple language the objects of the proposed legislation and explaining how it would produce the desired results.

Simplification and Codification of Death Duties

Estate duty legislation commenced with the provisions contained in the Finance Act, 1894, and has been amended and supplemented by a great deal of complex legislation extended up to the present day. Moreover, many of the decisions of the Courts have added to the complexity of this branch of law.

In addition, the Council believes that the rates of duty applicable to medium and large estates are difficult to justify and are indeed penal. These factors have led to numerous devices designed to mitigate the burden of the heavy duty which would otherwise be exacted and the Council therefore considers that an alternative form of duty such as legacy duty at graduated but more moderate rates might well be substituted for the present duties, without great loss of revenue.

Recommendation

That an independent body of suitably qualified persons be set up to examine the provisions of estate duty law and make recommendations thereon, including the possibility of introducing alternative methods of levying death duties.

Taxation Cases

Full reports of the cases summarized in this column will be published, with Notes on the Judgments, in the 'Annotated Tax Cases'.

Elwood v. Utitz

In the High Court of Justice in Northern Ireland (Queen's Bench Division) – December 16th, 1964

(Before Lord Justice McVeigh)

Income tax – Employment – Expenses – Subscriptions to clubs – Whether deductible – Income Tax Act, 1952, Schedule 9, paragraph 7.

It was necessary for the respondent, in the performance of his work, to go to London, and in order to obtain accommodation at reasonable cost he became a member of two London clubs. He was not required by his company to join the clubs.

The respondent contended that he was entitled to deduct, in computing his income under Schedule E, the membership subscriptions he paid to the two clubs. It was not disputed that he was entitled to deduct the cost of bed and breakfast there. There was in fact a saving by the respondent staying at the clubs. The Special Commissioners allowed the deduction of the subscriptions.

Held: the subscriptions were not deductible.

Barentz v. Whiting

In the Court of Appeal – January 19th, 1965

Income tax – Care of children allowance – Non-relative – Whether residence required – Whether having charge and care of children – Finance Act, 1920, section 19 – Finance Act, 1924, section 22 – Income Tax Act, 1952, section 214.

After the birth of her children in 1948 and 1953, and to the date of her husband's death in 1957, the respondent worked in a business during the mornings of Monday to Friday inclusive, and after her husband's death she worked all day from Monday to Friday. In 1953 the respondent engaged Mrs Allen to look after the children. She worked in the respondent's house in the mornings of Monday to Friday taking complete charge of the younger child and also looking after the older child. At the time of the death of the respondent's husband the latter child attended a day school, but the younger child did not go to school till January 1958. Afterwards Mrs Allen looked after the children when they were ill and during the holidays, and while they were at school she did a number of household jobs for them during the mornings.

The respondent contended that she was entitled to the allowance given by section 214 of the Income Tax Act, 1952, for 1957–58 to 1960–61 because Mrs Allen in fact had the charge and care of the children for the period prior to the death of the respondent's husband and also afterwards. It was contended for the appellant (i) that a claim for a person in Mrs Allen's position was maintainable only if the person in question was resident with the claimant; and that that was so whether the person was a relative or not; (ii) that Mrs Allen did not have the charge and care of the children for any of the years of claim; (iii) alternatively, that she did not have the charge and care of the children until 1957–58. The Special Commissioners decided (i) that residence was not required in the case of a non-relative; (ii) that Mrs Allen had the care and charge of the children for 1957–58; (iii) that she did not have the charge and care of the children for the other three years of claim.

Held (reversing the judgment of Mr Justice Ungoed-Thomas): Mrs Allen did not have the charge and care of the children for any of the four years of claim.

White v. Franklin

Income tax – Earned income relief – Settlement – Dividends payable to beneficiary while managing company – Whether earned income relief available – Income Tax Act, 1952, section 525, Schedule 9, paragraph 1.

A company took over a travel agency business in 1931, and there was an agreement of February 25th, 1931, by which shares were transferred to one of the two individuals who had carried on the business previously. The transfer was made on an undertaking by him to devote all his time to the company's business, and the shares were recoverable if he should cease to be the managing director, or to devote all his time and attention to the company and on his death.

In 1938 a settlement of 300 shares in the company was made by the respondent's mother and brother, and the respondent was entitled to the dividends 'so long as he shall be engaged in the management of the company', and should not do or suffer anything preventing him from receiving the income and retaining it for his personal benefit. There was a gift over of income and capital in favour of descendants of the respondent's mother, but limited to those serving the company, and there was ultimate gift over of capital in favour of his mother's descendants, but subject to a power of appointment by the trustees among the descendants who had contributed substantially to the success of the company. In 1938 the respondent's salary was £300, but from 1956 to 1962 he received bonuses varying from £1,500 to £1,850. There was verbal evidence that the family were anxious to encourage the respondent to stay in the business.

It was contended by the appellant that the settlement income was not remuneration from an office or employment of profit; and that therefore the respondent was not entitled to earned income relief. It was contended on behalf of the respondent that the settlement income was remuneration from an office or employment of profit within section 525 of the Income Tax Act, 1952; and that earned income relief was applicable. The General Commissioners decided in favour of the respondent.

Held (affirming the judgment of Mr Justice Ungoed-Thomas): the General Commissioners' decision was correct.

EXPENDITURE ON EDUCATION

Local authorities in the year ended March 31st, 1964, spent £958·8 million on education services of which £68·6 million was met from specific grants and £890·2 million from rates and general and rate deficiency grants. These figures are shown in the return on Education Statistics 1963–64 published by The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants and The Society of County Treasurers.

The total expenditure represented an increase of £84·3 million or 9¼ per cent on the previous year. The cost of primary education rose by £17·5 million (or 6·8 per cent) and secondary education by £24 million (or 7·5 per cent) but the largest proportionate increases in expenditure were for further education and training of teachers which rose by 17·7 per cent and 23·2 per cent respectively.

The number of pupils on school registers in January 1964 was 7,048,562, or 112,111 more than at the same time in the previous year, but the distribution changed. The number of pupils up to and including 11 years old rose by 70,528 whilst the number of children between 12 and 14 years fell by 61,934. By far the largest increase was in the number of pupils aged 15 years or more which rose by 103,517, a rise of nearly 20 per cent. The cost per pupil in primary schools was £63 7*s* per annum and secondary schools £113 10*s*.

TAXATION AND PROPERTY TRANSACTIONS

Second Edition Now on Sale

BY EDWARD F. GEORGE, LL.B.

The abolition of Schedule A tax by the Finance Act, 1963, and the introduction of an entirely new system of taxation of income from land would alone have necessitated a second edition of this book. Although this major change in the system brought about the end of many anomalies, the enactment of provisions for taxing premiums and 'deemed' premiums on the grant of leases has led to a new set of hurdles to be overcome. Consequently a good deal of the book has had to be entirely rewritten.

The 1963 Act has had side effects in almost all branches of the subject and, apart from this, there have been various decisions on different aspects, all of which have been noted, so that in the result hardly any part of the book has escaped revision. This is particularly noticeable in the last chapter; what were formerly traps are no longer so, but the path is now beset with new snares to be considered and avoided.

The salary will be according to age and experience, but not less than £1,500 p.a.

Applications giving details of education, qualifications, experience, etc., to Box AT7385.

ACCOUNTANT

We are an expanding group and wish to appoint a person responsible for controlling the accounts of the ten companies in the group. Applicants, who need not be qualified, must have a thorough knowledge of all aspects of accounting routine and be capable of working on their own initiative. They will be required to produce regular financial returns and must be able to prepare accounts to final balance sheet.

Applications should be made in writing, stating age and giving brief details of previous experience, to: Mr P. L. Harris, Managing Director, Wildcliff Ltd, Head Office, The Garage, Occupation Road, Cambridge.

ACCOUNTANT/ OFFICE MANAGER

Required by multiple bakery company, Romford. Mainly shops and retail routes. Excellent opportunity for capable and conscientious applicant. – Write stating previous experience to R. Mountstephen, c/o 'Gilltrows', 163 High Street, Hounslow, Middlesex.

Chartered Accountants and the Budget

THE complexities and anomalies of the new system of direct taxation which has been promised us cannot have been more impressively set out than in the two memoranda which we reproduce on other pages, and which have been sent to The CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER by the Councils of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales and The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland. From the CHANCELLOR so far we have had little more than vague statements of intention bolstered up by somewhat doctrinaire pronouncements on the underlying policy. They are in remarkable contrast to the incisive points made in the two memoranda which require to be answered officially, and the sooner the better.

Both memoranda ask for a White Paper which would set out the new proposals in detail and must incidentally therefore answer a number of questions, many of which have already been put to the CHANCELLOR in vain. It would also be useful to have a dispassionate account of the new taxes, removed from the atmosphere of the political arena. The kind of question which the White Paper could answer is amply set out in the Institutes' memoranda. The mere drawing up of the White Paper would well assist officials to come to a realization of the many anomalies that need to be guarded against. Moreover, once the White Paper was published, the various bodies who are qualified to give advice to the Government on these matters would be in a better position to know which particular anomalies the officials had overlooked, and to advise accordingly.

Some of the possible anomalies are comparatively obvious, but it has not been possible to obtain any official statement about the Government's intentions. It is still not clear that all dividends and like payments which one company pays to another out of profits charged to corporation tax will be freed from corporation tax in the hands of the recipient company. From April 1966 there is to be a kind of withholding tax, under which companies paying dividends are not only to deduct standard rate income tax but also are to account for it to the Revenue. Suppose this dividend is paid out of reserves of profit which have already suffered both profits tax and standard rate income tax of earlier years. Must the company really pay what is effectively a third tax on those profits?

What has been officially indicated is that companies whose profits suffer overseas tax will be allowed to claim double tax relief only against British corporation tax, the rate of which will inferentially be less than the combined rate of income tax and profits tax hitherto payable. In effect, therefore, those companies which made overseas investment on the footing that the overseas tax would all be relieved are going to be disappointed. More disappointments are threatened for companies which have entered into seven-year covenants on the basis of being able to deduct and retain tax at source.

For persons resident abroad who have acquired shares in British companies, the new provisions imposing a liability on the company to deduct and pay over to the Inland Revenue income tax at 8*s* 3*d* in the £ will constitute a withholding tax, and at a remarkably high rate.

Many will remember the inconsistencies and anomalies of the two-tier structure of profits tax, combined with the system of imposing directions on companies which failed to distribute a reasonable proportion of their profit. On the one hand the profits tax imposed a penalty on distributions, on the other the surtax imposed a penalty on non-distribution. The present Government is hastening back to this extraordinary position. They are asked now to see to it that some kind of logic is introduced into their intentions.

Companies are entitled to know now what the rate of corporation tax is going to be. They should certainly know it by next April. Official announcements so far have left it to be inferred that the rate will not be announced until April 1966. How can one possibly settle on a financial policy in the face of such uncertainty? And what of those companies in the development stage who have amassed losses and capital allowances which have had to be carried forward because there have so far been no profits against which to allow them? Are the losses to be available against corporation tax? So far there is no official answer.

We have spoken above only about the new corporation tax, which by itself is enough to throw immense burdens on the Inland Revenue and on accountants and financial advisers. But at the same time there is to be a general capital gains tax, official information about which is as vague as the official information about corporation tax. This other tax will require, for one thing, a great deal of recording, estimating, and computing. The English Institute asks that even if it is only to relieve the administrative burden there should be an exemption of small gains.

Incomes, Prices and Trade

ACCORDING to the latest Progress Report from the Department of Economic Affairs, 'stabilizing the price level is one of the most urgent and important problems confronting the Government'. 'It is', states the document, 'central to the successful carrying forward of a programme of balanced growth. . . . No Western country, however, since the war has yet succeeded for long in combining stable prices with a high level of growth and employment.'

So far Mr GEORGE BROWN has succeeded in persuading both sides of industry to promise co-operation in seeking such stability. The modus operandi of his proposed National Board for Prices and Incomes has not yet been announced, but it would be unwise simply to assume that it will automatically have much more success than has been achieved by similar organizations elsewhere in the Western world, for example in Holland or in Australia.

It is conceded by the Government that measures to strengthen competition in the economy will form an important part of its prices policy. This development is logical, but sight should not be lost of the fact that in competitive conditions it is not only prices that must be determined by market forces. The structure of incomes, too, must reflect the balance of supply and demand for different types of labour, with all this entails for labour mobility if those incomes are to remain stable. For such reasons Mr ENOCH POWELL has gone on record with the assertion that an incomes policy is pointless for, if inflation and restrictive practices are paramount, an incomes policy is unworkable, whereas if competitive forces are allowed full rein, it is unnecessary.

The ultimate restraint on the incomes and prices spiral in the United Kingdom is provided by the balance of payments position. At present all the emphasis of the Government's propaganda is directed to an expansion of exports. Such a policy seems logical, bearing in mind that half of our exports are accounted for by barely two hundred firms. On the other hand, others such as Sir ROY HARROD, in a recent letter to The Times, have argued that the present restrictions on imports may, at least in the shorter run, have to be retained, since it is not practicable to force U.K. exports up to the level required to cover current imports. For the moment, however, the effectiveness of the import surcharge may be doubted. Certainly, with this week's announcement of its reduction to 10 per cent as from April 27th, and its complete abolition in the not too distant future, this particular restraint is not likely to assist the balance of payments significantly.

It is this export problem, more than any other factor, which is responsible for the revival of the question of Britain's entry into Europe. Recently, U.K. exports to Western Europe have been rising. Last year they accounted for 38 per cent of total exports, compared with 28 per cent ten years earlier. Exports of manufactured goods to the Common Market countries have doubled in value in the last five years. Last year, however, they rose in value by only 2 per cent, due in the main to restrictive measures in France and Italy. In contrast, exports to the European Free Trade Area in 1964 rose by 11 per cent, compared with 7 per cent in the two previous years. The growing importance of the EFTA market is noteworthy; last year's exports totalling £618 million were equal to about three-quarters of the total exports to the European Economic Community.

Linked with the need to retain free entry into the E.E.C., is the necessity to stimulate competition in the U.K. domestic market, which would inevitably follow membership of a wider European community. The resultant infusion of competitive spirit into Britain's economic life would undoubtedly exert a salutary effect on productivity and her industrial effort.

There is no alternative, or at least no apparent alternative, to this policy in the longer run. The United Kingdom cannot continue to run a persistent deficit on its balance of payments. The present standard of living is being maintained, in part at least, by the recurrent drains on reserves or by overseas borrowing. In the short run, as Professor GOTTFRIED HABERLER points out in a new Hobart Paper, Money in an International Economy, published last Monday,[1] the elimination of such a deficit necessitates some belt-tightening on the part of the community, because more must be exported (or less imported), thus reducing the real resources available for domestic consumption and investment.

Nor does devaluation offer an easy way out. It would be idle to pretend, however, that the danger of devaluation is not still with us. The recent $3,000 million bankers' loan must be renewed, quite apart from the cost of its servicing. Likewise, the pressure on sterling in the world's exchange markets has been alleviated; but only because for the time being there is some lingering hope that the U.K. economy can be resuscitated and, by an improved export performance, the prestige of sterling restored. While one must have every sympathy for the MINISTER OF ECONOMIC AFFAIRS in his efforts to 'get the economy moving', time – as he must be the first to realize – is not on his side.

The recent weakness of sterling and the potential threat to the dollar are by no means on a par. Sterling is weak because Britain cannot pay her way. The dollar is weak simply because the American Government and American industry have been too profligate in their overseas lending and investment. There is, however, a common need to resolve the issue of international liquidity, and to protect reserve currencies such as sterling and the dollar from spasmodic speculative attacks and pressure such as that generated by President DE GAULLE's expressed desire to convert France's dollar holdings into gold. Yet Professor HABERLER has little sympathy with many of the present-day arguments for increasing international liquidity. In his opinion, 'present arrangements and policies make it too easy to shore up untenable positions and to finance for too long fundamental disequilibria without sufficient guarantee that the time is well used for making the necessary adjustments either in the form of exchange rate changes or of a tightening of credit or budgetary retrenchment . . .' Although Professor HABERLER's views may not be entirely in accord with current thinking on the world liquidity problem, his comments have a particular relevance to the present situation in the United Kingdom.

Mathematical Programming in Accounting

by J. M. SAMUELS, B.Com., A.A.C.C.A.
P. D. Leake Research Fellow, University of Birmingham

PROGRAMMING is a mathematical technique, and as such is a tool which can be used to solve problems in other disciplines. It has been used with considerable success over recent years in the fields of economics and operations research. It is a technique which is well suited for solving some of the problems found in accounting, which makes it surprising accountants have not put it to greater use. Recently, however, details of such studies have been appearing in accounting literature[1]. In the present article an attempt is made to show how the additional information provided by programming can be of assistance in the decision making process.

The particular mathematical programming technique that will be used is linear programming which, apart from being the most well known, is perhaps the easiest to use, there being several not difficult computational methods which yield precise answers to problems. The technical objective in linear programming is to maximize or minimize a linear function subject to a number of linear constraints. For example, it shows how to maximize profits where there are a number of different products competing for the use of certain limiting factors in a business. The significance of the assumed linear relationships will be dealt with later in the article.

It is suggested that programming can be useful in fixing budgets in a company, both for purposes of planning and control. It is with this aspect of cost accounting and management accounting that the article will be concerned.

Budgeting

Before discussing programming further and the results that can be obtained, it is necessary to clarify the role of budgeting. It is generally agreed that its two major functions are to serve as a plan and as a means of control. The question that has to be asked is, to what extent do the results obtained from programming assist, or even improve, in fulfilling these roles?

Programming can be used to show the optimal product mix of a business in circumstances when accepted cost accounting techniques cannot. It can therefore provide more satisfactory budget figures. The 'optimal product mix' or 'optimal output' is the one that in the circumstances of a particular business produces the greatest possible profit; it will in this application have a meaning attached to it similar to that of the term 'standard' in normal accounting terminology. Standard is defined by Kohler as 'a desired attainment; a performance goal'[2].

This system of setting the standard equal to the best possible performance the business can achieve within its constraints can be criticized. It is often suggested that standards should be set so that they are attainable but not too loose. If, however, standards are interpreted according to this latter definition, even an approach to the standard still means the performance is capable of improvement.

While it is all right for planning purposes to set targets at the optimum level, it might be thought unwise to do so for control purposes. A means of measuring the degree of control in a company is to compare the standard costs with the actual costs, if the standards are set at the best possible level (i.e. minimum costs); the fact that the goal of actual equalling standard is rarely achieved can, it has been suggested, give rise to feelings of frustration in the business. This point of view implies that 'good planning data and good control data are not necessarily the same'.[3]

In this article the writer is concerned with showing how programming can be used to assist in the planning aspect of budgeting.

[1] See, for example, Journal of Accounting Research Spring 1963: Charnes, Cooper and Ijiri – 'Breakeven Budgeting and Programming to Goals'; Autumn 1963: Ijiri, Levy and Lyon – 'A Programming Model for Budgeting and Financial Planning'.

[2] A Dictionary for Accountants, by E. H. Kohler. (Prentice Hall Inc, Englewood Cliffs, N.J.)

[3] Budget Control and Cost Behaviour, by A. C. Stedry. (Prentice Hall Inc, Englewood Cliffs, N.J.)

Marginal Costing

The way in which programming can assist in accounting will be illustrated with reference to marginal costing. The report of The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants, Marginal Costing, demonstrates that in 'appropriate circumstances the right information can be provided only by the use of the marginal costing technique'. In certain circumstances, however, even this technique cannot reveal the complete solution.

The I.C.W.A. report gives an example where a factor used in production is at a particular point in time in short supply, with the result that it limits the volume of output. More than one product is produced so it has to be decided on which product the company should concentrate and to what extent. It is possible to do this where there is only one limiting factor by expressing the contribution (i.e. the difference between the unit selling price and the unit variable cost) of each product as a percentage of the limiting factor it absorbs. The company then concentrates on the product that shows the largest percentage, as this gives a greater contribution towards profits and fixed costs per unit of the limiting factor absorbed.

What happens, however, if there is more than one limiting factor or if soon after one factor becomes scarce, another also begins to restrict production possibilities? The report states that > 'as the aim of management should be to use all factors to the maximum extent it may be advisable, in appropriate circumstances, to express the contribution in relation to alternative factors and to secure the greatest overall contribution'.

This step in itself, however, does not reveal the optimum mix of products; it does not show how much of each product the business should aim at producing in order to obtain the maximum contribution.

This can be seen from the following example which, it is suggested, is a typical problem. A question of this type, but where there is only one limiting factor, is often found in costing examinations.

Example 1

A factory makes two products where unit prime costs and selling prices are:

	Product X	Product Y
Direct materials cost	s20	s30
Direct wages	25 (grade A – 1 hour) (grade B – 2 hours)	40 (grade A – 6 hours) (grade B – 1 hour)
Selling price	185	325

For 1964, fixed overhead is budgeted at £120,000 per annum. Grade A labour is difficult to obtain and it is not expected that more than forty thousand hours of grade A labour will be worked. Grade B labour is also in short supply and not more than 20,000 hours of such are expected to be worked. The resulting budget for total direct labour of 60,000 hours is well below the capacity of the other factors used in production. Wage rates for grade A labour are 5s per hour and for grade B 10s per hour.

The problem is to decide how much of each product the company should produce in order to obtain the largest profit.

Case A

Answer considering grade B labour as only limiting factor.

$$\text{Product X} = \frac{140}{2} = 70 \qquad \text{Product Y} = \frac{255}{1} = 255$$

The company should in these circumstances concentrate on Product Y.

Case B

Grade A is also a limiting factor, so the contribution is expressed in relation to the alternative factor.

$$\text{Product X} = \frac{140}{1} = 140 \qquad \text{Product Y} = \frac{255}{6} = 42{\cdot}5$$

This suggests that the company should concentrate on Product X.

This approach to the problem is indeterminate. Obviously to make the best use of all the factors it is necessary to budget for a mix of products. Linear programming, as is well known, will provide such an optimal mix.

The result of concentrating entirely on either Product X or Product Y is a loss. Regarding grade B as the limiting factor and concentrating on Product Y results in a loss £34,995. Regarding grade A as the limiting factor and concentrating therefore on Product X gives a loss of £50,000.

To leave the main line of this article for a moment, Example 1 can be used to illustrate the old controversy of the dangerous effects of basing policy on figures which have been affected by an arbitrary allocation of the overhead costs. If the overheads are absorbed by a direct labour hour method, Product Y appears to result in a loss of 25s per unit, whereas Product X shows a profit of 20s per unit, and so is the one on which to concentrate. The result of such a policy was shown in the previous paragraph. If the overheads are absorbed on the direct labour percentage rate, Product Y appears the most profitable, but the final result would again be a loss.

Linear Programming Approach

To return to the main argument. Marginal costing has failed to reveal satisfactory budget figures for the company but the use of programming, as now will be shown, would have done so.

The problem is to maximize the contribution towards overheads and profits, which is 140*s* for each unit of X, and 255*s* per unit of Y. This means making the outputs of X and Y as large as possible subject, to the constraints first, that $1x+6y$ is not greater than 40,000, and secondly, that $2x+1y$ does not exceed 20,000. In programming terms this means maximizing the objective function of:

subject to the constraints that

$$1x+6y \geqq 40{,}000$$
$$2x+1y \geqq 20{,}000$$

and that, $x \leqq 0$, $y \leqq 0$.

It is not the purpose of this article to show how to solve linear programming problems, there are many books on this subject. For information, however, the 'simplex method' was used in its solution, the exercise taking only a few minutes; the mathematics involved are not complicated, just a matter of following a procedure. Anybody who has 'waded' through the problems involved in consolidated accounts would find this a very easy process.

The resulting answer is that the optimum product mix is 7,273 units of Product X, and 5,454 units of Product Y. This gives the company a profit of £450.

CALCULATION OF PROFIT WITH OPTIMAL OUTPUTS

Sales		155,903
Materials	15,454
Wages	19,999
Overheads	120,000
		155,453

This result is a great deal more satisfactory than would have been obtained by following the solutions found in the earlier cases. The company can now set satisfactory production budget figures.

The same technique can be followed in more complicated cases where, for instance, there are more than two limiting factors, or more than two products to be considered in the mix.

It might be argued that very rarely is more than one limiting factor found in an organization. But at any time there are a number of factors that cannot be increased in the short run, e.g. floor space, number of machines, supervisors, etc. The company wishing to make the greatest use of what it has of these factors can find the optimum product combination by a programming technique.

Dual Solution

The use of programming in accounting as described may be well known to a number of accountants but, if one is to judge by current literature, the properties of the 'dual' solution are less well known. Corresponding to every linear programming maximization problem, there is a minimization problem, and vice versa. One is said to be the 'dual' of the other, and fortunately its value is found automatically as a by-product of the initial problem. The dual problem has an interesting and important interpretation in terms of accounting values. Its solution gives answers, called 'shadow prices', which can be interpreted as the 'true values' of the limiting factors in the foregoing example.

There are occasions when the accountant, having found the most profitable combination of outputs, will wish to know how much profit can be imputed to each of the inputs. This is the problem which is answered by the dual solution of linear programming.

The factors have together earned the returns to the business. If it can be shown how much of the profit or contribution the last unit of each factor has earned, it would give management guidance in its development plans and also in transfer pricing between one department and another. The shadow price of the resources reflect the values of their marginal products, that is, the increase in profits which would accrue to the firm if it could somehow obtain another unit of such a factor. For example, in the previous problem the shadow price would show the return to the business resulting from employing the last unit of grade A labour. This shadow price can then be compared with the market price to see if it is worth acquiring, if possible, extra units of the factors.

The primal problem in the example involves maximizing output subject to certain limitations, the dual problem involves minimizing these shadow prices subject to the constraints that the values of the two products produced must not be less than the amounts necessary to allocate all profits (or contribution).

This remarkable symmetry in the mathematical statement of the problem can be seen in the following theoretical formulation. It is not necessary to understand the theory, in order to see the significance of the results.

$$\text{Maximized profit } P = P_1 X + P_2 Y$$

subject to resource limitations

$$k_{a1} X + k_{a2} Y \leqq C_a$$ $$k_{b1} X + k_{b2} Y \leqq C_b$$ where P equals profit of the product, X and Y the type of product, C is the total supply of the factor, and k shows the amount of factor needed to produce one unit of the product.

The minimization problem is $$\text{Minimized imputed cost } C = C_a N + C_b M$$

subject to the requirement that all profits are imputed

$$k_{a1} N + k_{b1} M \geqq P_1$$
$$k_{a2} N + k_{b2} M \geqq P_2$$

where N and M represent the shadow prices of the scarce resources.

Substituting the figures used in the earlier maximization problem, this gives $$\text{Minimize } 40{,}000N + 20{,}000M$$

$$\text{Subject to } 1n + 2m \geqq 140$$
$$6n + 1m \geqq 255$$

The result is that $n = 33{\cdot}6$ and $m = 53{\cdot}2$. This means that the 'shadow price' for A grade labour is 33·6*s* per hour and for B grade labour 53·2*s*.

We know that the cost of A grade labour is only 5*s* per hour, and for B grade 10*s* per hour. This shows that it would be worth while obtaining more of both types of labour, as the return from the next few units will be greater than the cost. In this example it is rather a hypothetical point as both A and B grade labour are limiting factors and more cannot be obtained in the short run. The same exercise can be carried out, however, where the factors are not in limited supply and management wishes to know whether it is worth while increasing its supply of a factor. This step would not be taken if the returns from the extra unit were going to be less than the market price.

Allocation

The shadow price of grade A labour is therefore 33·6*s* per hour and grade B labour 53·2*s* which, when allocated to the products gives their total value – which is, of course, their price.

Product X=Direct material (20*s*)+Direct wages (25*s*)+Shadow price A, 1×(33·6*s*)+Shadow price B, 2×(53·2*s*)=185*s*.

Product Y=Direct material (30*s*)+Direct wages (4*s*)+Shadow price A, 6×(33·6*s*)+Shadow price B, 1×(53·2*s*)=325*s*.

Not only have the overheads been allocated to the products but also the profits. The purpose of allocation is usually given as either to control expenditure, or to give guidance as to which product is the most profitable. Programming has revealed the optimum production targets and so satisfied the later objective.

An interesting point arises when a factor used in production is not fully used in the optimum production mix and spare capacity remains. The resulting internal price is zero. This is obviously so when one remembers the definition of internal price, for if an additional unit of the factor was purchased its returns to the business would be nil. All the previously available supply has not even been used. The contribution that would be allocated to a product or a department in the business for using some of this spare capacity would be zero. This is sensible as the company should wish to encourage the use of this spare capacity. It is a characteristic of linear programming shadow prices that so long as excess capacity exists in a factor, then zero prices will be quoted for it, and hence the user will be induced to use the factor.

It is suggested that this is a more sensible solution than is sometimes obtained with an arbitrary allocation of overheads. A department can find itself in a situation where it is reluctant to use, for example, a spare machine, because if it does so it will be loaded with additional overhead costs which are being allocated on the basis of machine-hours used. In fact, it is in the interests of the business to use this idle machine which, although profitable for the department to use when it only has to bear the direct costs, is unprofitable when loaded with overheads.

With the 'dual' programming method of allocating overheads, this situation would not occur, the machine could be used with no additional overheads being charged against it. This can be illustrated in the following example.

Example 2

A firm makes two products, X and Y.

For manufacture, it requires raw materials and unskilled labour as direct inputs; and resources of floor space, machines and skilled labour, which are in common use for both products.

The firm is limited to 240 square feet of floor space
210 machines
90 skilled men
Production of X requires per unit –
1 square foot of space; 3 machines; 1 skilled man
Production of Y requires per unit
4 square feet of space; 1 machine; 1 skilled man
The contribution of X is £20 per unit, and £50 per unit for Y. The programming problem is to –

$$\text{Maximize } 20x+50y$$
$$\text{Subject to } 1x+4y\leqq 240$$
$$3x+1y\leqq 210$$
$$1x+1y\leqq 90$$
$$x\geqq 0,\ y\geqq 0$$

which gives an optimal product mix of X=40 and Y=50. This gives a contribution of £3,300 (20X+50Y).

The dual solution is the one in which we will be interested.

It is obvious in this example that machinery is in surplus; it is not all being used (3X+Y=170), whereas 210 machines are available.

$$\text{Minimize } 240p_1+210p_2+90p_3$$
$$p_1+3p_2+p_3\geqq 20$$
$$4p_1+p_2+p_3\geqq 50$$

which gives a solution of $p_1=10$, $p_2=0$, and $p_3=10$.

These p's are the shadow prices. Floor space and skilled men are the limiting factors. If the market price of floor space is under £10 per square foot, then it will increase the total profits of the firm to obtain at least one extra unit of space. If the market price of skilled men is under £10 per man then it pays to take on at least one extra unit of such labour.

The question arises, of what additional quantity of a factor can be employed before it becomes unprofitable? This is an important problem because it is not always possible to obtain additional supplies of such a factor as floor space in small units. The question can be answered by use of technique called parametric programming, which will indicate when it ceases to become profitable to employ extra units.

The allocation of the contribution, both joint costs and profits to Product X is as follows:

1 (£10) +1 (£10)=£20 per unit.

Allocating to Product Y

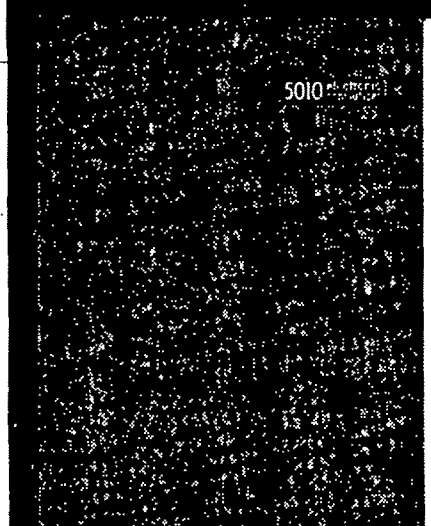
$$4p_1+1p_2+1p_3$$
4 (£10) +1 (£10)=£50 per unit.

This means that a department or product is to have allocated to it £10 for every foot of floor space it uses, and £10 for every skilled man it employs. It will not be charged any overheads on the basis of the machines it uses. If a system of costing is used where a product is expected to break even when it has charged to it direct costs and a proportion of the contribution allocated on the above basis, then the production of each product will move towards the optimum quantity. It will be seen that no allocation is made for using machinery as it has a zero shadow price. It is possible, therefore, for a department or product to use an extra machine if it can absorb the direct costs of the machine; it does not have to consider any overhead costs.

Conclusion

This article has shown some of the applications of linear programming to accounting problems. These are not, of course, the only applications. The examples were chosen because they simply demonstrate the possibilities. As with all simplifications, a number of assumptions have been made. Relationships have been assumed to be linear because this is the easiest method, computationally, with which to deal. The assumption that the objective function is linear, implies that the company sells as many units of the product it wishes at constant prices; it does not have to reduce its prices to sell more. The assumption of linear constraints implies that there are no economies or diseconomies of scale, the relationship between inputs and outputs is constant over all levels of production. In many cases, of course, either the assumption of a linear objective function or linear constraints cannot be made, but it is still possible to deal with the problem by the more difficult method of quadratic programming.

In defence of the criticism that while this type of approach may be alright in theory but has no practical use, it can be said that there are a few organizations who are, in fact, at present making use of linear programming, both in obtaining efficiency of resource allocation and co-ordinating the results of their operations. For shadow pricing can be used as a guide for decisions in a decentralized firm where a system of transfer pricing is needed or where a choice has to be made between alternative courses of action.



The techniques will not work for every problem, of course, as for example a certain amount of information is needed to construct the matrix, which may not always be available. Programming does, however, seem to be a useful tool with which the accountant can tackle some of the problems he has to face.

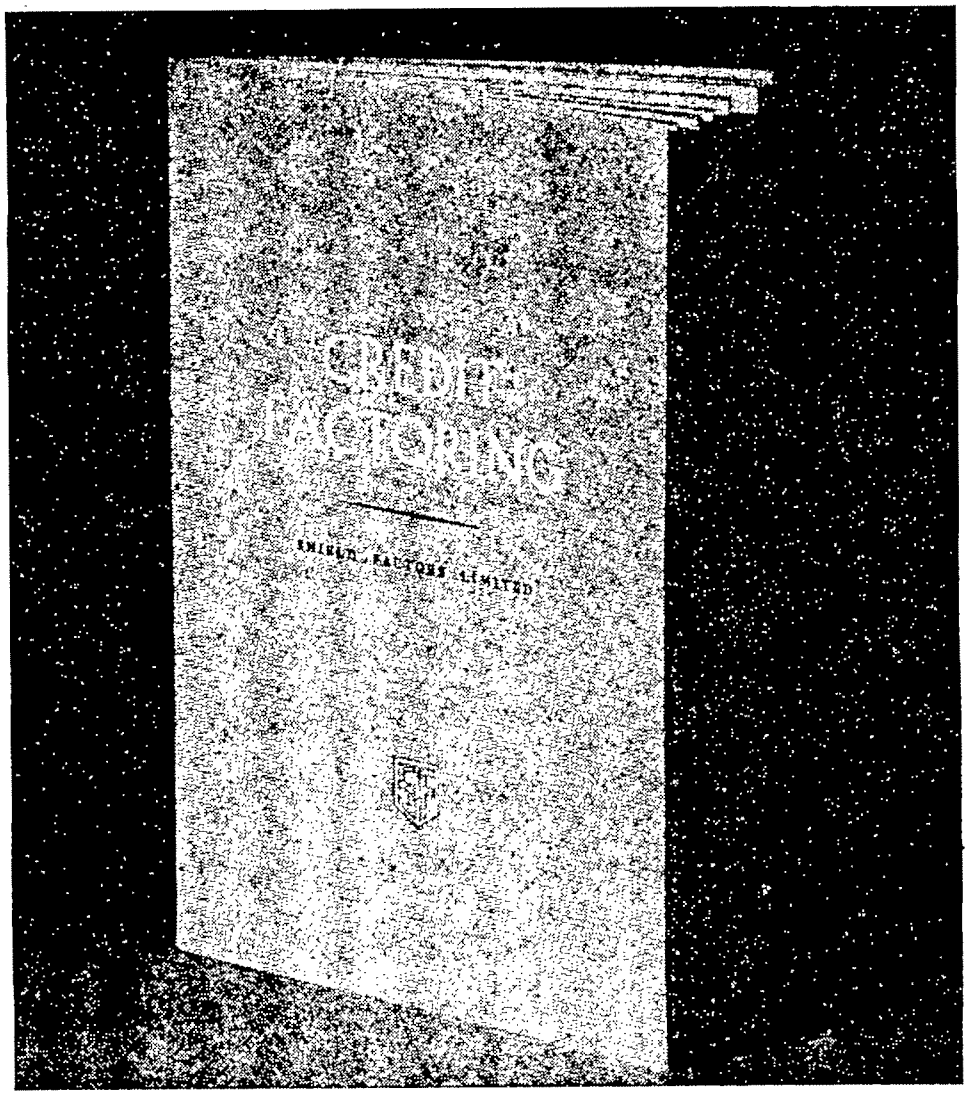
Invoicing problems cut down to size with the 5010 Electronic Computyper* by Friden*

DESIGNED FOR AUTOMATIC STERLING INVOICING

Friden 5010 Electronic Computyper puts a complete invoicing department in a single desk. The operator has only to enter the relevant figures and descriptions on a typewriter keyboard—additions, subtractions, multiplications, calculation and application of discounts, all these functions are performed electronically by Computyper, in silence and at speeds rated in milliseconds. The electronic unit is a fully transistorized, solid-state, electronic processing unit, providing 12 magnetic core stores of 12 digits each.



The 5010 Electronic Computyper is fitted with a removable plugboard which can be easily programmed for specific requirements in sterling calculations, decimals and weights and measures. Friden have behind them many years of successful manufacture and sale of decimal Computypers throughout the world—Friden 5010 Electronic Computyper has therefore a vast wealth of experience behind it.

Computers and the Practising Accountant – I

The Application of Computers to Share Registration Work

by C. D. BURRIDGE, Assistant Registrar, and
G. D. HUGHES, Computer Manager, Lloyds Bank Ltd

A PAPER on the application of computers to company share registration work could be very lengthy indeed, and if the subject is to be dealt with in its entirety, would extend well beyond the time at our disposal. For the moment, therefore, we shall deal with the subject in broad terms and answer any specific questions which may be raised later.

It is extremely doubtful if any registrar, whatever the size of his company, would consider any form of mechanization if it were not for:

(a) the balancing and control of the share register;
(b) the preparation and dispatch of dividends;
(c) the addressing of envelopes to shareholders, especially those to contain the annual report;
(d) the preparation of the annual return to the registrar of companies (some registrars deal with this return by photographing the register, or by the employment of relief typists to copy the appropriate details from the register);
(e) to assist with all types of issue work. (In view of the usual infrequency of this work, this is not a reason for mechanization, but is a fringe benefit.)

Before we deal with computers, let us briefly consider the other various ways in which share registration work is undertaken. First, there is the very small company where there is no form of mechanization at all. Every piece of work is hand-written or typewritten, and whilst there are only, say, one hundred or so shareholders, everybody is reasonably satisfied.

Outdated Methods

Then we come to the registrar who maintains a hand-written register and a set, or sets, of address plates for the purpose of addressing dividend warrants and preparing envelopes. This assists in cutting down the amount of transcription required at peak periods. This is the system used by a number of companies, including some surprisingly large concerns, but it is really unnecessary to point out the difficulties which can arise in all but the smallest of registrars' offices.

The next step in progression is to use an accounting machine sold by certain leading companies for the maintenance of the register and for producing the dividend warrants as to holding and net amount only. The address plates, as a separate operation, are used for addressing the warrants.

It is a matter of opinion as to whether the next stage is an advance on the one we have just outlined, or a disadvantage. Punched cards can be maintained as to holding and certain details, and when these are up-dated a movement journal is produced from which can be transferred either clerically or by transfer printer, to the register sheet, the details of the movement. The up-dated cards can be reproduced when required and passed through electronic calculators to ascertain the gross, tax and net amount of each dividend due to a shareholder. Here, once again, addressing machine plates are used, as a separate operation, to address the warrants.

It will not be overlooked that normally two sets of address plates are required, one in respect of the shareholder's registered address, and an additional set where dividends are mandated direct to a bank.

Complete Mechanization

We now come to the complete use of punched cards, electronic calculators, collators, card sorters and tabulators. First, we would like to refer to tabulators that may be used within their predetermined limits on a very wide range of tasks, apart from straight-listing of cards. Here we can have an almost complete data-processing system whereby register sheets, share certificates, dividend warrants, movement journals, annual returns, returns of allotments, and so on, can be produced without clerical effort. Having said that, do not think we imply that clerical staff are not required; they are, of course, necessary to deal with the very large range of duties which cannot be undertaken by machines.

This system has a great deal to be said for it. One is not faced with the inherent problems of address plates and their storage. Punched cards can be sorted and stored with comparative ease. On average, up to four or five cards, sometimes more, can be required for each account and, of course, this does present a maintenance problem when there are getting on for half a million or more accounts. In such an instance, the handling of 3 million cards is an advantage over all other systems we have mentioned so far, due to the many uses to which they can be put. Nevertheless, it is far preferable to be able to retain all this information on a few reels of magnetic tape; so we now come to computers.

It is unnecessary for us to mention that there are many types and sizes of computers, and each one has its particular merit. The various systems by which the work can be carried out are quite numerous. Here, once again, each system has its own particular merit, bearing in mind the capacity of the computer and the size of the share register. Costs are obviously involved to a great extent. No one would consider the purchase or rental of a large computer to deal solely with the registration work of a few thousand shareholders.

Computer System

From now on, we propose to base this address on the computer and the system generally we operate in our own department.

Firstly, we have an IBM 1401 computer, and without becoming too technical it may be mentioned that it has the following configuration:

1401/6 processing unit (16,000 core storage capacity).
1402 card read-punch (reads 800 cards per minute; punches 250 cards per minute).
1403 printer (600 lines per minute).
1407 console inquiry station.
4×7330 magnetic tape units.
In addition, we have: thirteen punches, eleven verifiers, one card sorter, two guillotines and two heat transfer printers.

As we have already said, mechanization is chiefly required for payment of dividends. Therefore, if we have to feed the computer with all details of changes in a shareholder's account, it is, in our opinion, not only economic, but highly desirable, to process as much work as may be possible through the computer over and above dividend work. It is on this basis that we have evolved our system.

When setting up a company's share register we punch all the necessary information from the existing register into punched cards. These cards are then verified and fed into the computer to produce a reel of magnetic tape. At the same time the computer produces a new register sheet for each account. The register sheets are then filed in Rollindex cabinets and are in alphabetical and numerical order by account number.

Should a company have more than one class of stock or share, these are all recorded on the same register sheet for each shareholder. Certain information which is not required in subsequent computer processes, such as an address or addresses of second and subsequent shareholders, is recorded on a particulars sheet immediately behind the computer produced sheet. The computer room now has a master tape which it can subsequently process, and the clerical staff have a share register from which they can work. In addition, of course, the register is available for public inspection.

Each day transfers, changes of address, dividend mandates, etc., are received in the office and dealt with from the clerical point of view. The following day, cards are punched and verified so that this information can be fed on to another reel of magnetic tape known as the 'changes' tape. At intervals – normally once a week or once a fortnight according to the size of the company – the master tape and the 'changes' tape are processed by the computer. This process produces a new master tape incorporating the old information and the new information from the 'changes' tape; at the same time a replacement register sheet is produced by the printer for each activated account. We now have an up-to-date master tape which can be subsequently processed for dividends or issue work. The register sheets are sent to the clerical staff to be placed in the Rollindex cabinets so that the visual information is up to date and, of course, agrees with that on the master tape.

The computer produced replacement register sheet quotes all the previous information, plus the change which has taken place. It will be appreciated, therefore that the clerical staff remove the old register sheet, which is subsequently destroyed, and it is replaced with the new up-to-date sheet. To ensure that the correct sheets are withdrawn, the computer also produces a list of the account numbers of sheets to be withdrawn from the register. The clerk filing away the new sheets does not see the list which has been produced, but later the sheets withdrawn are checked back to the computer-produced list by separate members of the staff to ensure that no errors have arisen as a result of the clerical withdrawal.

There is obviously a limit to the size of the record which is kept on magnetic tape. To build up unnecessary information over a period of years would mean that each week or fortnight when the company's master tape is processed, additional computer time would be required to read the tape; this would not only lengthen the process, but increase our costs. To obviate this disadvantage, when the length of the record reaches a certain size on magnetic tape, certain details are lost. The details so lost are, of course, only those which are not required for subsequent machine processes. When this happens, the computer advises the clerical staff not to destroy the previous register sheet, but instructs that the sheet should be retained as this information is then visual for all time.

Other Functions

Whilst the master tape is being up-dated, the computer is carrying out, simultaneously, a number of other functions connected with the maintenance of the register. For example, details of sales and closed accounts are written on to a separate reel of magnetic tape. This tape, in conjunction with the master tape, is processed once a year to produce the annual return for lodgement with the Registrar of Companies. It is also possible, when necessary, to ascertain certain statistical information when the register is being up-dated. This dispenses with the necessity of further computer runs at a later date. Numerous checks are also built into the process, not only to ensure complete accuracy of the work produced, but as a super-check on certain clerical work which has been undertaken as a necessary preliminary to feeding the information into the computer. It is hardly necessary for us to mention that the complete share register is balanced at each up-dating. This is unlike a punched-card system, where it is not usually feasible to pass all holding cards through the tabulator when processing a movement journal.

We could say quite a good deal more on this process, but we hope we may be excused from elaborating further on this aspect of the work. The reason for this is that the techniques involved are the result of a great deal of experience and original thought given to the subject generally. To give some idea of the complexity of the program involved, suffice it to say that it took eighteen months to write and test, and the computer is being used to capacity when dealing with this process.

Checks and Super-checks

The automatic checks and super-checks built into our system need to be studied in detail to be appreciated. An example of this is that the Modulus 11 check digit, which is a safety feature in the transposition of account numbers, cannot easily be applied to a share register which is in alphabetical and numerical order by account number. We have evolved a check which we consider even more comprehensive for our type of work, and it has now stood the test of time with complete satisfaction.

Dividend routines are simplicity in themselves, and here we process the master tape to produce a dividend list which quotes in account number order, the bank code if mandated, holding, gross, tax and net amounts of each dividend. The rounding-off of fractional amounts of 1*d* is dealt with progressively, and at the end of the run the total amount of each dividend payment must be exact to the penny. There is no over- or under-payment of a few shillings or more in respect of the total amount to be distributed.

At the same time as the dividend list is being produced, all details of dividends to be sent direct to shareholders are written on to another reel of tape. Items in respect of mandated dividends to the 'Big Five' banks are written on to another tape, and the remaining mandated items are written on to yet a further tape. The 'directs' tape is then processed to produce dividend warrants and counterfoils, and we quote the name and address on the counterfoil and the name only on the warrant. The tapes in respect of the mandated items are processed to produce the counterfoils for bulk distribution. All the items for one particular bank are produced together, and this is achieved by making several passes of the tape. In the case of the items mandated to the smaller banks it is necessary to undertake a 'tape sort' before printing the actual dividend counterfoils, to avoid too many passes of the tape.

With large companies, dividends are printed 'two-up' so as to reduce printing time by 50 per cent. Control totals and warning codes, where appropriate, are printed out on the inquiry station typewriter whilst the documents are being printed.

The checks and controls we have built into the system make it as foolproof as one can possibly imagine. We have now printed over two million dividends, and have been unable to fault the computer in any way.

Automatic Numbering

When the paid dividend warrants are returned to us they are sequentially numbered by an automatic machine. Cards are then punched and verified as to account number, the sequential number we have just mentioned, and the amount. These cards are then listed to agree to the total amount debited on the bank statement of account for that day or period. The cards are then sorted into account number order and matched with the 'directs' tape, which we also mentioned above. A list is then produced of the items paid in account number order, and this can be referred to by the clerical staff quite easily. It is not necessary to actually sort the paid warrants, as the sequential number quoted on the list will always enable the voucher to be found quickly.

After a period of time the items which have not been matched on the 'directs' tape are, of course, the unclaimed dividends. This tape is then matched with the master tape to produce reminder notices to be sent to the shareholders requesting them either to present the outstanding warrant, or, if it has been lost, to apply to us for a duplicate. The reason for bringing the master tape into operation here is to ensure that the last known address of the shareholder is used, and not, where there has been a change, the address as at record date of the dividend.

Envelope Addressing

We now come to the addressing of envelopes. This is achieved by processing the master tape through the computer and printing out the addresses 'three-up'. A special wax carbon paper is used and the print-out is subsequently guillotined into three separate continuous runs. These three printed lists are then processed separately through a heat transfer printer to actually address the envelopes.

Normal routine work not so far mentioned is lists of shareholders required by the various companies from time to time, and special statistical information which cannot be ascertained when up-dating the register. This work is achieved quite simply by passing the master tape through the computer and printing out the information required.

We have now covered very broadly most aspects of normal routine work. Automatic data processing has been achieved to a very high degree, but nevertheless quite a number of staff are required to undertake clerical routines which cannot be dealt with by the computer. Examination of transfers, probates, powers of attorney and the reference of documents to the register are facets of the work which cannot be handled by any form of machine.

We hardly think it is necessary to deal with clerical routines in any detail. Having outlined very broadly the computer system, it is not difficult to appreciate the amount and type of clerical work undertaken. Let it suffice to say that it is kept to a minimum and no opportunity is lost to write further computer programmes, or alter those already in existence, if it is at all possible to cut down on the clerical aspect of our work.

Capitalization Issues

Let us now deal with issue work. In the first instance we would like to discuss capitalization issues. We are normally requested to issue renounceable share certificates, and we shall therefore refrain from dealing with non-renounceable share certificates.

First, the register master tape is processed through the computer to print the allotment list. During this operation the allotment and certificate numbers are automatically allocated, and the actual allotments and fractions, if any, calculated. Totals are given at the foot of each sheet. Cleared totals are also given at the end of each control section. In addition, grand totals are given at the end of the task so as to dispense with any clerical summarization of the sheets. The list is printed on a two-part N.C.R. set. The carbon copy is used as the actual allotment list and post record indicating the addresses to which the renounceable share certificates are dispatched. The top copy is guillotined down in width to exclude certain information, then bound and lodged with the Registrar of Companies as the return of allotments.

As a simultaneous operation, an issue master tape is written. This incorporates all header information in respect of each shareholder's account such as name and address, etc., but excludes all details relating to normal purchases and sales. In addition, of course, all details of the issue are included. You will now appreciate why we call this an issue master tape. All subsequent operations rely on this tape, even to the extent of the final up-dating of the register.

Additional Information

This tape is now processed to produce the renounceable share certificates, and on the counterfoil of these we quote the holding as at record date, and the fractional entitlement, if any, for which a fraction cheque will be sent in due course. We are, as far as we know, the only registrar to quote this additional information which we have found is generally appreciated by shareholders. During this process, details in respect of foreign shareholders are written on to a further tape, which is subsequently passed through the computer several times so as to produce the documents in different groups according to the country of destination; this saves a hand-sort of the certificates.

At a later date when the shares resulting from fractions have been sold, we process both the issue master tape and the register master tape through the computer to produce the fraction cheques. Details of foreign accounts with a fraction are written on to a separate tape, which is subsequently processed several times in a similar manner to that for renounceable share certificates. This, once again, avoids a sort of the fraction cheques into country of destination.

Yet another tape is written during the initial run. This gives brief details of all fraction cheques issued and is used later for reconciling the paid cheques as and when they are presented. Some months later, reminder notices are dispatched in respect of unpresented cheques. The procedure for reconciling paid cheques is very similar to the system we have outlined for paid dividends.

It may be wondered why we use both the issue master and the register master tape in the initial run of fraction cheques. The answer is, of course, that the issue master tape was written as at the record date for the issue. Numerous changes of address are received in the period intervening between the record date and the date of preparation of the fraction cheques. By taking the current addresses from the register master tape, we considerably reduce the amount of clerical action required in making certain that the cheques are sent to shareholders' last known addresses.

Our experience is that companies prefer not to sell shares resulting from fractions until stock exchange dealings commence. This is the only reason why a fraction cheque is not attached to the renounceable share certificate. Needless to say, we could deal with the distribution in this manner if so requested.

Splits and Registrations

So far so good. Our issue routines to date have been simplicity in themselves, and we hope that in explaining them we have made them equally clear.

Dealing with splits and registrations once again is basically simple. However, quite a number of computer techniques are needed to achieve all aspects of this work. To explain them and to give the reasons would rather give the impression of too much complexity. We shall therefore be rather brief. As a necessary introduction to dealing with splits, we should mention that when an application for a split is received we normally issue a split receipt. We were originally requested to do this by the Secretary of the Share and Loan Department of the Stock Exchange. There are advantages and disadvantages accruing from the issue of split receipts as opposed to split renounceable share certificates. However, if split renounceable certificates have to be sent to the company to be sealed, there is inevitably a delay. From this point of view alone it is highly desirable to issue split receipts, and this is the reason why we have decided to use this system generally.

Returning to the computer routines, we punch a card for each certificate which has been renounced in respect of a split, a principal document in a registration or a subsidiary document in a registration. These cards are then sorted into allotment number order and are fed into the computer with the issue master tape. A history of the issue is then printed. This history looks exactly like the original allotment list, but where an entitlement has not been taken up, it is annotated with the reason for not taking up, together with a reference so as to enable the original document to be easily traced if required at a later date to answer any query. This process dispenses with the necessity of 'bonking out' as it is known in the issue world. Simultaneously with this print-out an 'on' tape is written. This tape incorporates details of all entitlements being retained by the original shareholders. This tape is subsequently used to up-date the register in respect of entitlements taken up.

Yet a further tape is written during the above operation, on to which is placed all details of accounts where there has been a renunciation, either directly as a result of a registration or an application for a split. This tape is subsequently processed together with cards in respect of the split residue. The purpose of this operation is to print a return of sales which is lodged with the registrar of companies with the next annual return of the company. Where there is a split residue being retained by the original shareholder, the net number of shares not taken up by him is shown – not the original entitlement. During this operation we also write a tape which is subsequently processed to produce the definitive certificates in respect of the split residue. This latter tape is merged later on with the tape in respect of registrations. These two tapes, together with the 'on' tape prepared in respect of entitlements retained by original allottees, are used to finally up-date the register.

Rights Issues

The procedure for dealing with rights issues is, of course, slightly different from a capitalization issue. Here, once again, in the first instance we process the master tape to produce an allotment list. This is not printed on N.C.R. paper as we do not send the top copy, as with a capitalization issue, to the Registrar of Companies as a return of allotments. Allotment letters are, of course, printed instead of renounceable certificates, but the procedure is basically the same in that all the United Kingdom addresses are printed as one batch, and all the foreign addresses as a separate batch or batches.

Subsequent routines are very similar, but in addition to punching cards in respect of splits, parents and subsidiary documents in a registration, we also punch cards in respect of shares not taken up. You will recall that when the history of the issue was printed with a capitalization issue, we also produced an 'on' tape in respect of all entitlements taken up. This 'on' tape in a rights issue is also used to produce the definitive certificates. Furthermore, by merging with the 'on' tapes from the split residue and the registrations, we are able to produce a return of allotments for lodgement with the Registrar of Companies. This omnibus tape is also used to up-date the share register.

Methods of Equal Merit

Before leaving issues generally, we should mention that we deal with the issue of split receipts or split allotment letters clerically, and not by way of the computer. There are advantages and disadvantages in both systems, but at the moment the scales are equally poised. It is quite likely that in the future we will, in fact, issue splits by way of the computer. We are currently re-writing all our issue programs with a view to them being far superior to those in use at the present time. These routines will give us many advantages over our present system, and there will be increased benefits by issuing splits via the computer except in the case of very small companies.

It will doubtless be appreciated that it has only been possible to deal with our normal routine work and issue work in rather general terms. However, before closing it may be of interest to give a few timings as to the speed at which our computer can work.

Fast Output

Renounceable share certificates which, of course, quote the name of the first shareholder, followed by his address and then the name or names of second and subsequent shareholders, are produced at the rate of 4,800 per hour.

Dividend warrants and counterfoils to shareholders are produced at the rate of 7,200 per hour, whilst counterfoils in respect of dividends mandated direct to banks are produced at the rate of 12,000 an hour.

Preparation of the annual return is dealt with at the rate of 13,500 accounts per hour.

The addressograph master for producing annual report envelopes is dealt with by the computer at the rate of 15,000 addresses an hour.

Also inherent in the system is the fact that if an individual company requires special information or returns, or has requirements over and above those which can normally be expected, the request can be met without any problem whatsoever.

This was the first of a series of three addresses on 'Computers and the practising accountant', given to the Data Processing Discussion Group of the London and District Society of Chartered Accountants on February 9th. The subjects of the other lectures will be 'Keeping clients' time and fee records with the aid of a computer service bureau', by Mr P. C. Forbes, F.C.A., of Messrs Turquand, Youngs & Co, on March 9th; and 'Five feasible frauds', by Mr Julian Peppercorn, computer expert with IBM (U.K.) Ltd, on April 13th.

Investment Trust Accounts

IN last week's issue we referred briefly in a 'Weekly Note' to a study recently issued by the Society of Investment Analysts on the form and content of the annual reports and accounts of investment trusts. The study is the first fruits of The Corporate Information Committee of the Society which was set up following a recommendation from the Second Congress at Cambridge last year of the European Federation of Financial Analysts Societies.

The study comprises a 'model' report and accounts, with explanatory memoranda, of an investment trust company – from which we reprint the consolidated balance sheet and revenue account, with the accompanying notes – which has been produced following a survey of the accounts of 265 quoted investment trusts in the United Kingdom, of which 249 are members of the Association of Investment Trusts, and sixteen are other companies with assets of over £3 million. The survey does not define an 'investment trust', but it is pointed out that not all companies so described in the Stock Exchange Official List are investment trusts 'in any accepted sense' and that other companies usually considered as investment trusts are to be found in other sections of the Official List.

It is stated that on the whole the quality and range of information provided was found to be excellent, and the quantity is continually increasing. Accordingly, it was felt best to prepare the specimen accounts almost entirely on the best current practice and not make any radically new departures.

The accounting date assumed for the specimen accounts is December 31st, 1963 – a date of more significance when one considers the suggested timetable:

Publication of unaudited consolidated results – January 10th, 1964.

Date of auditors' report and directors' report – January 20th, 1964.

Date of notice of annual general meeting – January 28th, 1964.

Date of annual general meeting – February 25th, 1964.

Prompt reporting, it is stated, is clearly desirable.

Consolidated Balance Sheet

The major point arising on the balance sheet is the inclusion of market value of the investments as an integral part of the asset value, rather than as a note, whether separated from the item in the accounts or not. This practice is hailed as a particularly welcome development, and since it simplifies the balance sheet for the unsophisticated shareholder, is a trend to be encouraged.

Twenty-nine companies (11 per cent) ignore the dollar premium altogether, while thirty-four (13 per cent) state the total amount (or the pence per share) by way of note or included in the directors' report or chairman's statement.

The survey comments:

> 'It is most important that this method (of including the investment dollar premium in the market value) should always be adopted, since it is doubtful whether omission of the premium complies with the Companies Act, 1948. After all, a purchase of such securities requires payment of the premium, and when selling, the premium is received. The fact that it varies is irrelevant, as it is an integral part of the value to a U.K. holder. If the security happens to be quoted on the London Stock Exchange, then the premium is already in the London price, and therefore taken into account even though the company professes to exclude it.'

This quotation is part only of the comments on a point which is obviously regarded as of vital importance. Attention is also drawn to the advisability of showing redemption terms for the preferred charges in some detail, necessary to calculate the asset value of the ordinary shares, and to the separation of the authorized capital from the balance sheet.

Consolidated Revenue Account

The estimated double taxation relief for the year is added to the gross revenue from investments, instead of being deducted from the taxation charge for the year, and it is stated that this complies with current practice. Subsequent adjustments to the estimate would be included in the item 'Taxation adjustments for previous years'. Comparison of portfolio yields is made possible if all trusts treat D.T.R. in the same way.

Underwriting commission has also been included under gross revenue, although a minority of trusts exclude it from this heading on the grounds that it can vary widely from year to year, crediting the item directly to reserve. The authors of the report feel, however, that consistency in treatment between trusts is important enough to outweigh such considerations.

The subsidiary company in the specimen accounts has dealing profits which are taxable and expected to be erratic. On the grounds of avoiding misleading indications of dividend cover, these profits have been segregated into a statement at the foot of the revenue account. Earnings for ordinary shareholders (excluding the dealing profits) are arrived at by deducting preference dividends from the net revenue after taxation, and both the earnings and the dividends for

It is also recommended that priority percentages should be stated as based on the revenue for the year (excluding adjustments for previous years). These percentages – at the foot of the revenue account – will be seen to be shown on a cumulative, or 'more-than' basis, so that the percentage of the year's revenue which is applied to each class of finance is revealed only by the difference between the two adjacent figures.

Chairman's Review

A specimen review is not given in the original since this 'should be a personal comment'. Two full pages are, however, allocated for this purpose in the specimen report and accounts and a suggested list of items to be included is given of which the following are the salient points:

(a) a brief statement of the aims of the investment trust, and of the policy being followed to realize those aims;

(b) a summary table giving key figures;

(c) reference to any capital issues during the year, with reasons and giving the effect on the company;

(d) reference to any change in the board and management;

(e) economic background of the main areas in which investments are held, perhaps with movements of local share price indices;

(f) reference to any major changes in the portfolio;

(g) reference to the outlook for the current year (with perhaps a dividend forecast) and to any policy changes that are likely.

The directors' report, states the survey, gives only the briefest information required by company law, and is consequently printed near the end. All the other information of interest to shareholders is given in the chairman's review. It is clear that the authors regard the directors' report as unsuitable since mandatory legislation as to its contents have led to the giving of only minimum information. The words 'perhaps a dividend forecast' in (g) above, imply the expectation of a similar minimum in the rate of dividend which would be forecast.

Ten-year Record

No less than one hundred and fifteen (43 per cent) of the companies' accounts reviewed gave no form of past record; twenty-one companies 'give an adequate, although not necessarily perfect, historical record.' Adequacy for this purpose being defined to include 'indications of total assets (not merely the valuation of investments or the assets available for equity shareholders), and also fairly full details of all new money and retentions'. It is also recommended that the terms of cash issues, mergers or acquisitions, or debenture redemptions which would affect a historical comparison, should be shown.

The specimen record given differs from the five-year record recommended by the Jenkins Committee, but includes for each year: gross revenue; net earnings for ordinary shareholders; earnings and dividends per ordinary share, in pence; retentions; total assets and assets per ordinary share. These are stated to be the minimum which are considered necessary by way of headings.

It is stated that figures 'have been adjusted for capitalization and rights issues, and so relate to the present ordinary capital'. Should rights issue adjustments be needed, states the report, then they should be made by the usual ex-rights/cum-rights ratio, and the method should be stated.

Analysis of Investments

Only nine companies gave no information, and another nine very limited information, concerning their portfolios. Ninety-four (35 per cent) gave 'an adequate, though not necessarily perfect, analysis'. Non-adequate analysis is stated to involve classifications (such as commercial and industrial or British Commonwealth) which are 'too broad to be useful', or to use separate classifications by 'priority, by locality and by trade' which can be misleading by the combination or interaction of categories.

The 'model' uses headings for a location analysis, giving separate columns for each major country and/or continental area. If an area exceeds 3 per cent (of the total), it is stated, then the actual countries comprising the major portion should also be given. Trade groups are shown vertically to give a two-dimensional analysis using largely the components of The Financial Times – Actuaries indices with a few extra items.

The number of companies in which equities and convertibles are held is stated, and it is pointed out in the report that the number of holdings of fixed interest stocks is not normally of importance. Nevertheless, it is recommended that a full list of investments should be supplied with the accounts and that, in any case, a short list of the largest (say) ten investments should always be given. Lists of investments could be available on application or open to inspection at the registered office or otherwise but, says the report, should give the amount of shares or stock held, the full company name and full share or stock description, and the value of each holding.

Unaudited Results

It is recommended that half-yearly reports should be published and sent to shareholders, giving notice of the dividend payable and the unaudited gross revenue for the first six months of the financial year. At the same date, unaudited consolidated balance sheet figures for investments at valuation (including investment dollar premium) and net current assets are stated in the specimen half-yearly report, together with an equivalent asset value per ordinary share. The corresponding figures for the first six months of the previous year are also given. It is anticipated that such interim statements can be published within eight days of the half-year balancing.

The annual unaudited statement (to be issued by January 10th) shows similar figures for the full year, with the addition of taxation, net revenue after taxation and preference dividends (with earnings per ordinary share in pence), and ordinary dividends in total and in pence per share.

The unaudited statements would, of course, be issued separately but were given in the specimen booklet for convenience of presentation.

Notes on the Balance Sheets

1 Quoted investments have been valued at middle market prices. Those outside Great Britain, and cash balances, have been converted at official rates of exchange on 31st December 1963, including the investment dollar premium of 11¼% (1962 6¼%) where applicable. This premium is not applicable to the nominal amount of the U.S. $ Loan Notes.

Weekly Notes

N.E.D.C. AND THE MANAGERS

THERE has been a tendency in some quarters to ascribe the disappointing rate of growth in the British economy to the poverty of ideas among its managers and their lack of initiative and efficiency. Whatever the truth may be, the fact remains that good management is essential to ensure a dynamic economy. A new report from the National Economic Development Council entitled Management Recruitment and Development (H.M.S.O. 5*s* net) examines the practice of management recruitment among British firms. The results of the inquiry are based upon a sample survey covering three groups of companies, those with over twenty thousand employees, those with between two thousand and twenty thousand, and a final group with less than two thousand.

In manufacturing industry alone, there are some three hundred and fifty thousand managers and it is estimated that an annual intake of some twenty thousand is needed to allow for replacement, technological change and growth. Many companies, notes the report, have difficulty in finding the type of recruits they need, either for management training schemes or for appointment or promotion to first management positions. The main difficulty, the report continues, was to find candidates with the personal qualities required for management.

Among the several conclusions of note is that too little use is made of women in managerial positions, although with the rising marriage rate it is difficult to see how their number in senior posts can be augmented significantly in the future. Companies, it is felt, should take a greater interest in management training as well as in career planning for their younger staff and there is a need for improved methods of co-ordination and liaison between industries and those providing management courses.

This is an interesting report, but it raises as many problems as it resolves.

THE ASSOCIATION'S EXAMINATION RESULTS

THERE were 3,417 candidates for the December 1964 examinations of The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants, of whom 1,332 were successful. Seventeen were awarded honours.

In the Final examination, section II, there were 450 candidates, of whom 159 (35·5 per cent) passed, the First Place being won by Mrs S. F. D. Dev, of South Ruislip; Second Place by Mr H. J. E. Farrugia, of London; Third Place by Mr A. R. Marchant, of Isleworth, and Fourth Place by Mr K. F. Harpham, of Scunthorpe. In section I, 699 candidates sat, and 171 (24·4 per cent) were successful. The First Place was won by Mr F. N. C. Lochan, of London, the Second Place by Mr J. R. O'Hara, of Edinburgh, and Third Place by Mr A. A. Awelenje, of London.

In all sections of the Intermediate examinations there were 2,105 candidates, of whom 895 were successful. In the Preliminary examination 107 of the 163 candidates passed.

The names of the successful candidates in sections I and II of the Final examination, together with a summary of the complete results, appear elsewhere in this issue.

CITY CHARTERED ACCOUNTANT BECOMES D.E.A. ADVISER

MR DEREK PALMAR, F.C.A., a director of merchant bankers Philip Hill, Higginson, Erlangers Ltd, is to join Mr George Brown's Department of Economic Affairs as an Industrial Adviser. He will be the City's spokesman in a small team the Department is setting up to advise the Government on matters relating to the development of industry.

Mr Derek Palmar

Mr Palmar, who is aged 45, was articled to the late Sir Harry Peat and was admitted to membership of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales in 1947. He remained with Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co until 1957 when he joined Philip Hill. Since then, he has been the bank's specialist in mergers and take-overs and has handled well over one hundred such schemes for its clients. Among the more spectacular of his merger operations was the series of deals by which Mr E. P. Taylor, the Canadian industrialist, rapidly built up his large brewery interests in Britain. In 1960, after a very few months, they resulted in the formation of United Breweries Ltd, and two years later came the merger of United with Charrington & Co, to form the £129 million Charrington United Breweries.

Mr Palmar takes up his new appointment on March 29th, and is being seconded by his company for a period of two years.

LOWER SURCHARGE, HIGHER SPENDING

MR BROWN announced to an appreciative audience of ministers from the other members of the European Free Trade Association at Geneva this week that the surcharge on United Kingdom imports will be reduced from 15 to 10 per cent from April 27th. E.F.T.A. cordiality has now been restored.

When Mr Callaghan, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, made a parallel announcement in the House of Commons he had also to inform the country that fiscal expenditure for next year would be 8·9 per cent over the Budget estimates for 1964–65. Prices are expected to account for 3·8 per cent of the rise but defence expenditure is up by only 2·3 per cent compared with 5·5 per cent a year ago. Civil spending, including education and welfare, however, is to increase by as much as 10·9 per cent.

The Government intends to maintain some relationship between the rise in public expenditure and the increase in the national income, but estimates for the latter increase are not available. The size of the increase in expenditure this year suggests, however, that future growth of the national income is being mortgaged this year, presumably to be paid back in the future. It also means that this year's Budget is going to take account of a swing in expenditure away from the private sector to the public sector. Foreign creditors will be looking for signs of economic discipline in this

MORE INFORMATION FOR SHAREHOLDERS

LAST August, the Chairman of the Stock Exchange, Lord Ritchie of Dundee, wrote to the chairmen of quoted companies drawing attention to various points concerning the provision of information by public companies to their shareholders (The Accountant, August 29th issue).

Since then, discussions have taken place with various professional bodies in connection with the recommendations and a number of helpful suggestions were made. Many of these have been incorporated in a Supplemental Undertaking (reproduced below) issued last Tuesday and now being circulated to companies by the Stock Exchange. This undertaking will be required from companies where applications for quotation are heard after March 26th.

Apart from a description of the operations carried on by the company and an analysis of the contribution of widely differing operations to the trading results, the main requirements of the undertaking are disclosure of information relating to certain subsidiary and associated companies and the publication of half-yearly interim reports. The obligation of all quoted companies to comply with these requirements will only arise as they come to the Stock Exchange for new or additional quotation, but a number of companies have already indicated their intention of implementing the requirements before any such obligation arises and, of course, some companies already provide information beyond these requirements.

Supplemental Undertaking (Companies)

(1) To include in or circulate with each annual director's report and audited accounts or chairman's statement:

(a) (i) A description of the operations carried on by the company or, if the company has subsidiaries, the group.

(ii) If the company or, as the case may be, the group carries on widely differing operations, a statement showing the contributions* of such respective differing operations to its trading results.

(iii) If the company or, as the case may be, the group trades outside the United Kingdom, a statement showing a geographical analysis* of its trading operations.

(b) If the company has subsidiaries (see Notes (1) and (2), a list giving for each:

(i) its name and country of operation;

(ii) the percentage of its equity capital attributable to the company's interest (direct and/or indirect).

(c) If the company or, as the case may be, the group has interests in associated companies (see Notes (1) and (2)), a list giving for each:

(i) its name and country of operation;

(ii) particulars of its issued share and loan capital and the total amount of its reserves;

(iii) the percentage of each class of share and loan capital attributable to the company's interest (direct and/or indirect).

(2) To circularize to the shareholders, not later than six months from the date of the notice calling the annual general meeting of the company, a half-yearly interim report containing similar information to that required by the Council for preliminary announcements; and to notify the Share and Loan Department, immediately after the relevant board meeting has been held, of the figures and other particulars in the half-yearly interim report.

NOTES

(1) For the purpose of this Undertaking 'associated company' means a company which is not a subsidiary but in which 25 per cent or more of the equity is held by the company or, if the company has subsidiaries, by the group companies collectively (i.e. before excluding any proportion attributable to interests of outside shareholders in the subsidiaries).

(2) The particulars required in 1 (b) and (c) in relation to subsidiaries and associated companies need not be given for any such company which is dormant or is not material. For this purpose a subsidiary or associated company should be considered material if

(a) the total investment in it normally represents more than 5 per cent of the assets of the company or, as the case may be, of the group; or

(b) the interest in its profit or loss normally represents an amount which is more than 5 per cent of the profit or loss shown by the accounts of the company or, as the case may be, of the group.

(3) Under circumstances to be adjudicated by the Council the particulars required in 1 (b) in relation to subsidiaries may be omitted for non-trading subsidiary holding companies.

(4) The Council may in any particular case agree to modification of the terms of this Undertaking. Any such modification may be for a particular occasion or may be permitted to apply until further notice.

year's Budget and at present they are well placed to make their views felt. The private sector of the economy may take the brunt of the disciplinary measures devised by the Chancellor.

FINDING CAPITAL

IT is over thirty years since the phrase 'the Macmillan gap' was coined to describe the difficulty which smaller concerns have in finding finance. Since then much has been done to close that gap and a good deal written drawing the attention of businesses of all sizes to the facilities which are available for raising all types of capital.

A booklet has now been issued by The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants called Sources of Capital.[1] Its purpose, according to the introduction, is to assemble in a convenient form information about some of the traditional and lesser-known sources of capital.

Within the compass of seventy-two pages it has succeeded in being remarkably comprehensive. It does not claim to be exhaustive but it manages to embrace a very wide range of sources of capital, written in a brief but intelligible style. It begins with long-term capital as raised in the new issue market and from the large investment institutions, and works right through to house mortgages. It takes in special finance institutions and financial facilities for special industries, such as agriculture, on the way. The section on short-term financing includes not only bank credit and trade credit but invoice discounting and factoring as well. The booklet has much to recommend it both to the student and to the business man who may want a convenient sized ready reference on the subject.

BANK LOSES CASE UNDER THE CHEQUES ACT

THE Court of Appeal, on February 17th, allowed the appeal of the drawer of a cheque who was sued on it by the bank into which it was paid (Westminster Bank Ltd v. Zang.) Mr Zang asked a Mr Tilley for £1,000 cash which Mr Tilley gave him. Mr Zang drew a cheque on his account at Lloyds Bank for £1,000 and payable to 'G. Tilley or order'. Without endorsing it Mr Tilley paid it into a branch of Westminster Bank when a company owned by him, Tilley Autos Ltd, had an overdrawn account. He filled in a paying-in slip in favour of this company, and the slip had a printed note reserving the bank's right to postpone payment of cheques drawn against uncleared effects which might have been credited to the account. Under the bank's internal regulations, the cashier ought to have required Mr Tilley to endorse the cheque, but this was not done. The cheque was dishonoured on presentation. The bank handed it back to Mr Tilley who sued Mr Zang on it, but this suit was dismissed for want of prosecution. Mr Tilley handed the cheque back to the bank who then sued Mr Zang on it. His plea that the cheque had been given by way of gaming failed.

The bank was not the 'holder' of the cheque within the meaning of section 2 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, i.e. it was not the payee or endorsee in possession (the cheque was still not endorsed). However, the bank relied on section 2 of the Cheques Act, 1957, which provides:

> 'a banker who gives value for, or has a lien on, a cheque payable to order which the holder delivers to him without endorsing it has such (if any) rights as he would have had if, upon delivery, the holder had endorsed it in blank'.

On behalf of Mr Zang, four points were taken against the bank's contention:

(1) Mr Tilley the holder did not deliver the cheque to the bank; it was delivered by Tilley Autos Ltd, using Mr Tilley as agent.
(2) If the cheque was delivered by the holder, it was not delivered 'for collection', since it was not paid into the holder's account.
(3) The bank had not given value for the cheque, nor did it have a lien so as to satisfy section 2.
(4) In any event, the bank ceased to have any rights in the cheque when it handed the cheque to Mr Tilley to enable him to sue on it.

Any one of these four points, if successful, was sufficient to defeat the bank. The whole Court was against Mr Zang on the first point: as payee in possession he was the holder. Lord Denning alone accepted the second point, holding that endorsement was dispensed with by the Cheques Act only where the cheque was paid in to the credit of the payee himself. The Court unanimously accepted the third and fourth points. On the third point, Lord Denning said it was not enough for the bank merely to credit the company's account with the £1,000 cheque in order to say it gave value. The bank must show an express or implied agreement that the company could draw upon the fund thus credited, whereas such agreement was negatived by the printed note on the paying-in slip. Again, having handed back the cheque to Mr Tilley, the bank had abandoned any lien it may have had. The simple course for the bank to have taken was to get Mr Tilley to endorse the cheque in blank. Leave was given to appeal to the House of Lords.

COMPANIES BEYOND JENKINS

IN Companies Beyond Jenkins, a new P.E.P. publication[1], Professor Michael P. Fogarty reiterates the proposal by Professor L. C. B. Gower, in his book, Modern Company Law, that legislation relating to companies in the private sector and the nationalized corporations should be re-cast into a single Corporations Act. Such an Act might also, it is suggested, embrace mutual societies, such as building societies, trustee savings banks and co-operatives.

Supporting this view, Professor Fogarty points out that since corporations, whether public or private, are the chief working units of the modern economy, their success is fundamental to productivity, exports and industrial relations, as well as to national policies and the whole political climate. Both nationalized industries and public companies (especially the larger ones) today are faced with common problems of planning and organization in which profit and public accountability are working criteria.

It is not suggested that the proposals for a Corporations Act supersede the recommendations of the Jenkins Committee for the reform of the existing Companies Act. These are ready for early action and entail no basic revision of either company law or the nationalization Acts. Professor Fogarty's proposals are more fundamental and need further preparation which, if undertaken thoroughly, will take some years to complete.

N.I.C.'s LAST WORD

FOR reasons which are as regrettable as they are obvious, the activities of the National Incomes Commission have been brought effectively to an end. The Commission will now be superseded by the incomes review panel of the new National Board. Whatever else the failings of N.I.C. might have been,

This is My Life . . .

by An Industrious Accountant

CHAPTER 265

ONE Sunday morning recently Scotty, the sales manager, had asked a few friends to drop in for a drink or so before lunch. 'A wee deoch and dorras', he explained cheerfully, filling the glasses with a lavish hand; he seemed to have an ample and well-filled cellar and I congratulated him on his good selection.

'Losh, laddie, I'm no connoisseur', he demurred. 'These are a' the remnants of my Christmas presents; I did verra well indeed, I'm glad to say'. A popular citizen, I reflected, and just then another guest, the buyer in our men's ready-mades department, chimed in emulously. 'I did better than ever', he affirmed. 'My biggest suppliers really came up to scratch this year. Three big hampers, with turkeys and hams and bottles; and at least five cases of brandy or Scotch, not to mention the usual odds and ends'. Scotty agreed. He had been presented with more bottles than usual, he thought, including a couple of magnums, though the cigars seemed to have tapered off. . . . The men's wear buyer interrupted to tell about some fine suit lengths from Bradford, and the manager of the footwear department capped their boasts with a story of a crate of cut-glass from Northampton.

My face must have registered blank astonishment, because Scotty started to chuckle hugely. 'What's the matter?' he asked. 'Dinna ye puir accountants ever get Christmas presents?' The footwear manager pointed out that the least a supplier could do, after a hard year, was to offer some little token of gratitude for orders placed and business maintained; nothing valuable, of course, let's not misunderstand these little Yuletide goodwill gestures, but just a little token. The ready-mades' buyer had just finished a large gin and tonic, so he said forcefully that presents were a recognized trade custom and if he didn't get what he expected, he'd know where not to place his next order.

I sat brooding sorrowfully over my sherry. It was only too true; accountants don't rank for presents. Bis dat qui cito dat, said the Roman, but we don't give at all.

We accountants in industry have no human contacts with generous-hearted clients. Imagine expecting a hamper from our normal outside connections – the lawyer, stockbroker, or banker! I can't visualize it. My brother-in-law, a bank manager in a country town, receives grateful acknowledgements (anything from a goose or a leg of mutton to a sack of potatoes) but he's different. Our auditors might perhaps be open-hearted by nature, but then they probably expect gifts from their clients, rather than vice versa.

But auditors seem so detached, so abstemious, so remote from material pleasures like good food and drink! They never think of inviting the credit controller or head book-keeper to lunch in mid-audit; on the other hand, of course, we never think of inviting them to dinner as a token of gratitude when they agree our trial balance. Probably both sides are to blame for not achieving a breakthrough into friendly hospitality. Surely few clients would stoop to query the increase under 'sundry out-of-pockets' in the subsequent statement of account; few auditors would pause in their random sampling to scrutinize a trivial 'business entertainment' docket.

The trouble is that the partners in our firm of auditors don't seem to appreciate the desirability of meeting clients informally over dinner; they might, indeed, wonder where to start as they glance down their long lists of contacts. In our case, naturally, it should be myself – though the chairman might think differently.

In Milan I once saw a smiling traffic policeman surrounded with gifts bestowed by passing motorists – a time-honoured token of quarrels forgotten. What a superb target for us accountants next December, a queue of clients laden with parcels, along the passage, up the stairs; thanking us for guarding their fortunes, proclaiming publicly their warm appreciation of our services.

a failure to express their findings unequivocally was not among them. Thus, in the fourth and final report, discussing the agreements for increases in pay in the engineering industry and for increases in pay and reduction in hours in the shipbuilding industry, the N.I.C. finds that they were contrary to the national interest.

The Commission state that the national and negotiated wage increases in these industries did not take account of increases in earnings arising from other causes, i.e. of wage drift, and that the resulting total increases were in excess of 3½ per cent per annum, the level postulated by the Treasury as desirable. Furthermore, the settlements were superimposed on other increases in the pay packet, thus giving both engineering and shipbuilding workers more than their fair share of the increase in national productivity. The Commission stressed that only if wage drift is taken into account by those who settle wage increases at national level can an incomes policy be implemented.

One can but hope that ample copies of this report will be made available to the members of the proposed National Board for Prices and Incomes. The lessons it contains are all too clear – and depressing.

FOTHERGALE & CO LTD – VIII

LAST Tuesday's instalment of this B.B.C.-2 series marked the conclusion of the 'working' sessions and was devoted to the theme of raw material prices.

If there were any viewers who had hoped that this series might redeem itself at the eleventh hour, then their faith was to go unrewarded. In thirty minutes of 'soap opera' that seemed to be a distillation of all the most trivial aspects of what had gone before, little attempt was made to develop any explanation of management techniques that would have justified the B.B.C.'s claim that this is a serious educational programme. It is not sufficient to show unrelated shots of managers and supervisors consulting graphs depicting mythical production output figures, or dramatized boardroom conferences at which the news is broken to the chairman that the sole supplier of Fothergale's basic raw material has chosen this moment to nearly double the price – and all this heavily interlarded with Rudyard's own special brand of jargon (how many managers would understand what is meant by 'sub-optimizing profits in the short term'?).

We await with interest next week's appraisal of the series by a panel of management experts.

Finance and Commerce

Lloyds Bank

A NOTABLE advance in the presentation of bank accounts is made this year by Lloyds Bank. The first and most important change is in respect of bank premises which were shown in the 1963 accounts 'at cost, less amounts written off – £22,725,956'.

In the 1964 accounts the figure is £43,488,861. Explaining the new figure, Mr Harald Peake, the chairman, reminds shareholders of his references last year to the property figure and his statement that 'generally speaking' the bank's properties were 'worth more than the figures at which they stand in our books' with the rider that the properties were 'not readily realizable assets' and that it was 'easy to exaggerate the value' which can be placed on properties equipped with strong-rooms and 'accommodation peculiar to banking'.

Even so, it has been decided to show a more up-to-date figure based on a revaluation made professionally in 1959. Using that valuation and adding subsequent capital expenditure at cost and deducting sales, together with the necessary amortization provisions, the new figure has been arrived at. The increase in the book figure on revaluation amounts to £17,214,000 and that figure is shown under the Capital Reserve which is new to the latest accounts.

Revaluation

Remaining properties not used as bank offices continue to be included under 'Other Assets and Accounts' but they are relatively few and include the staff college, training centre and premises or land that may be needed for future branch extension. Most of these properties have been bought in the last twenty years.

Revaluation of branch premises is a lengthy and costly exercise – as many as 305 new offices have been opened in the last five years – and Mr Peake says that although revaluation may be carried out again at some time 'it is not our intention that this should be done regularly or at short intervals'.

It is twelve years now since the leading banks began to change their policy towards shareholders through more realistic dividend policies and the provision of more information in the report and accounts. For years before then, bank shares were to all intents and purposes fixed interest equities. Dividends were very rarely changed.

Since 1952 dividends have risen with rising earnings and old style capital formation in partly paid shares has been modernized with subsequent rights issues and reserve capitalizations. The present concern with property values is a natural follow-through to this new thinking.

NOTE:

Directors' emoluments amounted to £138,021 (1963: £144,491), including £16,202 (1963: £15,892) paid to certain Directors by subsidiary and other Companies and £5,000 (1963: £4,733) pension to a former Director in respect of past services as Chairman.

NOTES ON ACCOUNTS

I. Investments in British Government Securities amounting to £167,115,386 which are all redeemable at fixed dates, the majority maturing within 10 years, are taken at or under cost and below redemption price.

Market value of these investments at the 31st December 1964 was greater than the balance sheet figure.

II. Other Investments: The market value of the quoted investments at the 31st December 1964 was greater than the balance sheet figure.

III. Capital and Reserves: In December 1964 reserves of £7,658,091 (being Share Premium Account £7,205,000 and General Reserve £453,091) were capitalised by the issue of 7,658,091 fully paid shares of £1 each. The Capital Reserve of £17,214,000 represents the surplus from revaluation of Bank Premises.

IV. The consolidated accounts of Lloyds Bank Europe Limited and the accounts of Lloyds Bank Property Company Limited have been made to 30th September 1964. It is considered impracticable to produce audited accounts made to a later date without undue delay in the publication of the Company's balance sheet.

(a) The consolidated accounts of Lloyds Bank Europe Limited at 30th September 1964 are annexed. The issued capital of Lloyds Bank Europe Limited at 31st December 1964 was £2,500,000 in £1 shares after taking into account the issue, at par, in December 1964, of 1,300,000 shares of £1 each to Lloyds Bank Limited for cash.

(b) The investment in and advances to Lloyds Bank Property Company Limited at the 30th September 1964 amounted to £633,186 (£700,000 at 31st December 1964) which was represented by net tangible assets of £640,208 as follows:—

Freehold Properties at cost		£696,609		£614,005
Current assets		5		259

Trade Investments

The second major change in the Lloyds Bank accounts is the sub-division of trade investments under three headings. The chairman explains the make-up of the sub-divisions in his statement with the accounts and the explanation shows the ramifications of the Bank's interests – ramifications far wider than the public, and probably many of the Bank's shareholders, realize.

Of the £15,617,647 under the 'Banks' heading, the biggest investment is 36½ per cent of the ordinary capital of the National Commercial Bank of Scotland. Lloyds Bank also holds 25 per cent of the issued ordinary capitals of the Bank of London and South America and of National and Grindlays Bank.

There is also a 20 per cent interest in the ordinary capital of The Yorkshire Bank and 14¼ per cent and 16⅔ per cent interests respectively in the Bank of West Africa and the Mauritius Commercial Bank. There are also small shareholdings in The National Bank of New Zealand, the National Bank of Australasia and 'two other banks'.

The hire-purchase companies' figure of £18,273,163 represents, firstly, a 50 per cent interest in Lloyds & Scottish Ltd, the second biggest hire-purchase company in the country; National Commercial Bank of Scotland holds the other 50 per cent. The figure also includes a 24½ per cent interest in the ordinary capital of Bowmaker Ltd.

'Other Trade Investments', at £4,724,859, represent, in the main, Lloyds Bank's participation with other banks in the Industrial and Commercial Finance Corporation, the Agricultural Mortgage Corporation and the Bankers' Clearing House.

Competing for Deposits

Shareholders are also given a detailed look at Lloyds Bank's biggest subsidiary company – Lloyds Bank Europe, which used to be called Lloyds Bank (Foreign). At September 30th, the subsidiary's balance sheet crossed the £100 million mark for the first time and the subsidiary's accounts are provided separately, as the reprint shows.

A year or so ago there was considerable discussion among the banks on the possibility of a limited breakaway from an agreed rate of interest on bank deposits. There was talk of the introduction of term deposits at special interest rate scales but any such move was officially frowned upon.

Having agreed not to compete for deposits in this way, the banks thereupon set about the problem from a different angle by translating foreign departments into separate entities which could themselves attract what may be termed institutional and special character deposits at higher rates than the accepted domestic level.

This is modestly described, in banking circles, as 'flexibility'. The increase in Lloyds Bank Europe's deposits in the past year is noted in the reprint.

CITY NOTES

EXPERIENCE in the stock-market this week has suggested an investment awareness that the honeymoon is over. Over the past three months the equity market has staged a reasonable recovery mainly on the basis of good company results and of evidence of rising industrial output. The gradual recovery in prices has tempted buyers and while a major factor like the Budget was still far enough away not to enter into too many investment calculations, there was a tendency to support equities, at least on a hopefully short-term basis.

There are now signs that the Budget may be a stern affair. The Governor of the Bank of England has not exactly made himself popular with his comments on the dangers of too high a level of public spending. But he pointed to a factor which the stock-market has been pleased to push into the background.

Since Lord Cromer's statement, the Chancellor has made Government spending commitments clear and the market has been quick to latch on to that statement in Budget terms. All this has come a little late in the day but it has brought a feeling of unease.

The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales

Corporation Tax and Capital Gains Tax

MEMORANDUM TO THE CHANCELLOR

In response to the Chancellor of the Exchequer's invitation to representative bodies to submit points arising on his proposals to introduce corporation and capital gains taxes, the Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales wishes to raise the following matters for consideration.

Introduction – The Proposed New Fiscal Legislation Generally

(1) The proposed introduction of corporation and capital gains taxes in 1965 will involve changes of a fundamental nature in United Kingdom fiscal legislation. Changes of this magnitude cannot be introduced without significantly affecting the whole economic climate in which financial, commercial and investment decisions are taken. Moreover, the interpretation and operation of the new tax code will, particularly in its opening stages, impose a heavy administrative burden on the authorities, taxpayers, and their advisers. For these reasons the Council considers it highly desirable that a White Paper outlining the Government's proposals should be published at the earliest opportunity in advance of important new fiscal legislation, so as to enable the authorities to take full advantage of public debate and discussions with representative bodies in framing the new tax provisions. This is especially the case in present circumstances, since it appears that most companies have already entered the first period chargeable to corporation tax, but are unable to calculate its effects. The Council regrets that a White Paper on the present proposals has not so far been published, and hopes that opportunity may yet be found for such publication; in this event the Council would welcome the opportunity of early consultation with the authorities. Failing publication of a White Paper, the Council considers it important that the Finance Bill itself should be accompanied by comprehensive explanatory notes.

(2) In the absence of any clear indication of the form of the proposed new fiscal legislation the Council has found great difficulty in making constructive comment. The views that follow indicate some of the more significant considerations which the Council thinks should be taken into account in framing new legislation, but it will be appreciated that they contain a large element of conjecture. This is particularly the case in relation to capital gains tax.

Part I – Corporation Tax

Rate of tax

(3) The proposal to fix, in the Budget of April 1966, the rate of tax on income up to April 1966, indicates that subsequent changes in the rate will likewise be fixed retrospectively. Although, for the sake of preserving budgeting flexibility, this complication may be unavoidable in present circumstances, the Council regrets the necessity for imposing a tax at a rate with retrospective effect, and believes this to be undesirable in principle. It may be argued that such an arrangement will merely continue the existing system of fixing income tax rates on business undertakings retrospectively in terms of basis periods. There is an important practical difference, however, from the commercial point of view, between the existing and proposed new arrangements. Under the present system income tax estimated to be assessable for any income tax year commencing after the balance sheet date is not a current liability, since the tax circumstances of the company may change significantly before such tax is actually assessed and becomes payable. Under the new proposals every undertaking will be liable to corporation tax on the profits of each accounting period, and this will plainly constitute a current liability; but because rates are to be fixed in arrear it will not be possible to quantify the liability exactly. Any material uncertainty in this respect is undesirable in principle and may hamper the formulation of the company's financial policy. The Council hopes that, in the course of time, it will be found possible to eliminate this uncertainty from the corporation tax code.

(4) As already observed, many companies will have already begun to earn profits which are to be subject to corporation tax and may have been doing so since April 1964. For them to have to wait until April 1966 before receiving any authoritative guide as to what rate of tax must be provided out of such profits would in the Council's opinion be unreasonable. The Council therefore urges that the Budget of April 1965 should announce the rate of corporation tax in respect of the first chargeable year.

Treatment of dividend income

(5) Dividends received from United Kingdom companies should be 'franked' in all circumstances, i.e. excluded from the corporation tax assessment of the receiving company. The Council can perceive no justification for subjecting income successively to the same tax, merely because it passes from one company to another in the form of dividend.

Income tax deducted from dividends paid

(6) The requirement that after April 5th, 1966, tax deducted from dividends paid shall be accounted for to the Revenue will, it is assumed, apply only to dividends declared out of profits which have not already been subjected to income tax. Otherwise there would be a clear violation of the principle that income should not be doubly charged to income tax (having possibly borne profits tax as well). On this assumption it is apparent that rules will be needed to determine when a dividend has been paid out of the profits of a pre-corporation tax period.

(7) In the case of dividends paid to non-resident shareholders, the income tax deduction will take on the character of a withholding tax, at the rate of 41¼ per cent. This is greatly in excess of the rate of withholding tax levied in comparable countries, which is in some cases restricted by double taxation agreements. It is submitted that in the case of non-residents consideration should be given to the deduction of tax from dividends at a lower rate than standard rate. Special considerations apply to non-resident shareholders in overseas trade corporations; these are referred to below.

Deduction of income tax at source generally

(8) The liability of companies to account to the Revenue for tax deductions will extend to interest and other annual payments as well as to dividends paid. Likewise, it is implicit that income tax suffered by a company by deduction at the source from dividends, interest, etc., received will be the subject of relief to the company, by repayment or otherwise. The Council would expect that these various claims and counter-claims would be dealt with by offset as far as possible, and that settlement of tax due or repayable could normally take place at periodic intervals.

Covenants

(9) It would seem that covenanted annual payments to charities and other institutions will cease to be the subject of taxation relief to the paying company in any form, unless such payments would have qualified as deductions (but for section 137 (1) of the Income Tax Act, 1952) in the computation of trading profits. In view of the binding nature of existing obligations, it is submitted that transitional provisions should be made either to allow such payments as a deduction for corporation tax purposes, or to relieve the paying company from accountability in respect of income tax deducted.

Overseas trade corporations

(10) The Council considers that the legislation relating to overseas trade corporations has been of value to United Kingdom companies and groups trading overseas and beneficial to the economic interests of the nation. It is strongly of the view that means should be found to preserve the present tax status of overseas trade corporations. It is therefore submitted that what now constitutes exempt trading income for income tax and profits tax purposes should continue to be exempt from United Kingdom corporation tax. Double taxation relief for foreign tax suffered should be available to recipients of dividends paid out of exempt trading income; such dividends should be paid subject to deduction of United Kingdom income tax, but with full relief for the underlying overseas tax against the sum accountable to the Revenue by the paying company, as under the existing legislation. It is implicit in this suggestion that such dividends should in the hands of recipient companies not themselves overseas trade corporations be subject to corporation tax. At the very least it is desirable to protect the position of non-resident shareholders in overseas trade corporations, who are not at present subject to United Kingdom taxation on dividends received out of exempt trading income, and whose investments, in all probability, were made in good faith on this understanding.

Overseas taxation

(11) The proposal 'that a company which enjoys overseas income that has suffered overseas tax should receive credit for overseas tax only against the corporation tax to which it is liable' requires reconsideration. Such a policy could severely penalize companies for their past overseas investment and it is difficult to see how any 'transitional arrangements' could rectify the position. The expansion and establishment of United Kingdom companies internationally will be discouraged unless there is full double tax relief to cover countries in which the rate of tax is higher than the rate of United Kingdom corporation tax. The point might be partially met by permitting aggregation of all foreign income and tax thereon in order that rates which are in excess of the United Kingdom rate may be offset against those which are lower. It is suggested that this, at least, should receive consideration. Where the overseas tax includes a withholding tax, intended to be borne by the shareholder as such, the case is particularly strong for allowing relief for such tax to be passed on to the shareholders of the recipient company, without limitation by reference to the company's rate.

Commencement of corporation tax

(12) Income chargeable to income tax otherwise than under Case I of Schedule D will be assessed for 1965–66 by reference to a basis period which may not coincide with the basis period for Case I, on the termination of which corporation tax commences to be chargeable. It should therefore be expressly provided that income other than trading profit should be excluded from charge to corporation tax to the extent that it has entered into the basis period of any income tax assessment for 1965–66, or has been taxed by deduction at the source during that year.

(13) It should also be made clear that where, in the case of an income tax assessment on trading profits for 1965–66, being the first, second or third year from commencement, the profits of an accounting period are apportioned, and the earlier portion only is included in the assessment, the first corporation tax assessment should be limited to the residual term of that accounting period.

Relief to existing companies on cessation

(14) The outline proposals are silent on the question of cessation relief to be given when a company which was carrying on a trade before the introduction of the new scheme ceases to trade. The Council is of the opinion that there should be cessation relief, as was accepted in principle and provided for in the White Paper A Scheme for an Accounts Basis for Income Tax on Company Profits (Cmnd. 2347). The Council submits, however, that any such relief should be capable of determination at the outset and not be subject to a limitation imposed by reference to the trading results of the company concerned immediately prior to the actual cessation of trading, as was proposed in the White Paper. It would then be possible to grant this relief, perhaps by stages over a period following the introduction of corporation tax, thus enabling the treatment of existing companies to be brought into line with that of new ones.

Capital allowances

(15) Clarification is required regarding the treatment of capital allowances. In this respect it is assumed that the final figure of written-down value for income tax purposes at the end of the period which was the basis of income tax liability for 1965–66 will be the starting figure for corporation tax computations, and that the allowances will be given in arriving at the profits chargeable for corporation tax, and not, as under the existing income tax legislation, in charging those profits to tax.

'One-man' companies

(16) One of the stated intentions of the new system of taxation is to encourage the retention of profits in companies. This is inconsistent with the purpose of section 245, Income Tax Act, 1952 (which will presumably be retained in some form), and the further provisions indicated by the Chancellor, designed to prevent the avoidance of personal taxation by retention of profits. It is hoped that some logical reconciliation of these two opposing objectives will be found and, in particular, that machinery will be introduced for limiting any 'direction' of a company's income to a reasonable part of such income, instead of extending this treatment to the whole of it.

Director-controlled companies: directors' remuneration, loan interest, etc.

(17) With the introduction of corporation tax opportunity should be taken to remove the present profits tax limitation on directors' remuneration, loan interest, etc.

Small companies

(18) Companies which at present enjoy abatement of profits tax would be placed at a disadvantage by the replacement of profits tax by a composite tax which takes no account of this factor. It is assumed that this is recognized and that provision for imposing corporation tax at a lower effective rate on such companies will be made.

Unabsorbed losses

(19) It is assumed that the amount of any loss available to be carried forward under sections 342 and 345, Income Tax Act, 1952, at the end of 1965–66 will be allowed as a deduction for the purpose of the first (or subsequent) assessment to corporation tax, together with any capital allowances not absorbed for income tax purposes. In certain circumstances the loss available to be carried forward for profits tax purposes could greatly exceed the aggregate of these income tax losses and capital allowances and it is considered that the benefit of this should not be entirely forgone. If, by applying to the profits tax loss the fraction represented by the profits tax rate over the initial corporation tax rate (say 15/35ths), an amount in excess of income tax losses and capital allowances is produced, it is submitted that this should be substituted for the aggregate income tax losses and capital allowances previously referred to.

Loss relief against previous year's profit

(20) It is assumed that in order to preserve the existing benefit of section 341, Income Tax Act, 1952, there will be provision for losses to be carried back for one year (i.e. on the lines suggested in the White Paper, Cmnd. 2347) with special arrangements to cover the transition period.

Losses on termination and reconstruction

(21) The present relief under section 18, Finance Act, 1954, whereby a loss sustained in the last twelve months of a business can be set against the profits of the three preceding years, should be retained. Similarly, the provisions of section 17 of the same Act, which in certain circumstances enable losses incurred by a predecessor company to be brought forward on a reconstruction, should be retained.

Groups of companies

(22) It is submitted that the existing profits tax provisions giving the option to aggregate profits and losses in groups of companies should be carried forward into the corporation tax legislation. It is further considered that the present provisions whereby inter-company payments of interest, rent, etc., are disregarded for profits tax purposes could be eliminated.

Relief against corporation tax indirectly suffered

(23) If, as envisaged above, corporation tax will not be chargeable on dividend income derived from United Kingdom sources, a company, and in particular an investment company, may be unable to obtain relief for management expenses and bank and other interest because of the absence or insufficiency of income assessable to corporation tax. In these circumstances it is submitted that the right should be given for the repayment of corporation tax indirectly suffered, i.e. by the companies from whom the dividend income is received.

(24) A similar right should be given to trading companies which incur losses, enabling them to obtain relief, if they so wish, against dividend income received in the year of loss. In other words, the existing benefit of section 341, Income Tax Act, 1952, in this respect should be applied to corporation tax.

(25) It is axiomatic that a single source of income should not be subject to double taxation. It is clear from the corporation tax proposals, however, that dividends paid to individuals will in effect be subject to double taxation, in that the source of income, profits, will be subject initially to corporation tax and the balance, to the extent that it is distributed, will be subjected to income tax and possibly surtax in the hands of individual recipients. The profits which are the source of dividends will thus be taxed, in aggregate, from the shareholder's point of view, always at a rate higher than his maximum rate of tax. The Council considers that the character of profits is not fundamentally altered by the fact that they are earned and distributed by a joint undertaking constituted in the form of a company, and that shareholders should not be penalized in this way; it is submitted therefore that means should be found to give individuals some measure of relief in respect of the element of double taxation of dividends inherent in the present proposals, as is already allowed in a number of countries which impose corporation taxes.

Part II – Capital Gains Tax

General

(26) In preparing this memorandum the Council has assumed that the proposed capital gains tax is to be a new form of tax outside the scope of existing taxes on income and levied at a rate not higher than the standard rate of income tax. Higher rates would raise further issues not discussed here.

(27) The Council foresees serious difficulties in administering the tax in its proposed form, particularly as regards the establishment of asset values. It seems likely to be unwieldy in operation and expensive to collect, and will place a considerable burden on the Inland Revenue, especially in the early stages, when its considerable initial administrative and practical problems will coincide with those arising by reason of the introduction of the corporation tax. It is a matter for consideration whether in these circumstances, on administrative grounds alone, it would be desirable to exempt from tax capital gains up to a prescribed annual amount, notwithstanding the subsidiary problems, such as marginal relief, which such a provision would entail.

(28) Capital gains tax seems likely to involve many individuals in considerable incidental expense, which they would not otherwise have incurred, in complying with the law and quantifying their liability to tax. They will properly seek professional advice from brokers, valuers, surveyors and the like in establishing asset values, and will no doubt employ agents to compute and negotiate their assessments. It is the Council's view that without professional assistance of this nature capital gains tax may fail to be seen to operate equitably as between the taxpayer and the Revenue. The Council therefore strongly urges that professional fees reasonably incurred in arriving at the taxpayer's liability to capital gains tax should be specified as an admissible deduction.

(29) It is submitted that any tax on capital gains should be levied on gains measured in real terms and not on gains attributable merely to inflation. This could be achieved, in some measure, by allowing the valuation or cost, as the case may be, to be increased by an amount to represent the diminishing purchasing power of the pound, for example, 4 per cent per annum compound, over the period up to realization.

Valuation of assets following death

(30) Assets will be valued for capital gains tax purposes on the owner's death, but values may fall substantially immediately after death. It is submitted that provision should be made to give a deceased person's representatives the right to elect for assets to be valued for capital gains tax purposes either as at the date of death or twelve months later, subject to the substitution of amounts actually realized if assets are disposed of in the interim. Failing this, losses incurred by the personal representatives of a deceased person (i.e. realization of the assets of the estate at prices below the values attributed to them on death for capital gains purposes) should be made available to offset any taxable gains arising on the death.

Treatment of losses

(31) On practical grounds and as a matter of equity it would seem desirable to allow losses to be carried backwards, at least for a limited period, giving the right to repayment of capital gains tax previously suffered. In the case of terminal losses (on decease etc.) it is submitted that the period of adjustment should be extended to, say, the previous three years.

Business assets

(32) Assets used for business purposes should be exempted from the scope of capital gains tax on the lines of the provisions of section 11 of the Finance Act, 1962. This is particularly necessary where the proceeds of realization are reinvested in the business either in replacement of the asset disposed of or otherwise.

Companies

(33) It may well be that any taxable gain realized by a company would eventually attract a double charge to capital gains tax – once on the company itself on the realization of the asset, and again on its shareholders when they come to dispose of their shares to the extent that the value has been enhanced by the company's gain. In order to avoid this, it is suggested that there should be some procedure whereby a company would indicate to each of its shareholders the proportionate amount of the company's taxable gain attributable to his holding. The shareholder would then be permitted to take this amount into account in arriving at any gain assessable or loss allowable on the disposal of his shares.

(34) There is urgent need for early clarification of the application of capital gains tax to investment trust companies and others similarly placed.

THE INSTITUTE OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS OF SCOTLAND

BUDGET MEMORANDUM TO THE CHANCELLOR

THE Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland desires to submit to the Chancellor of the Exchequer its suggestions in connection with possible legislative changes which may be included in the Budget in 1965.

In view of the statements made in the Autumn Budget concerning changes that it is proposed to make in the 1965 Budget, the recommendations this year are particularly directed to various points that the Council feels appropriate with regard to these proposals. In this connection and as in the past, the Council does not concern itself with general pleas for overall reductions in taxation or with political questions. The Council trusts that its suggestions may be considered as being of a nature which may improve the administration of taxation or remove or mitigate causes of hardship or inequality among taxpayers.

General

It is difficult to make constructive suggestions or criticisms of either the corporation tax or the capital gains tax on the basis of the information regarding these taxes at present available. Where such far-reaching changes are to be introduced, it seems to the Council to be essential to the introduction of satisfactory legislation that a similar procedure be used to that adopted in connection with the proposed introduction of the 'Scheme for an accounts basis for income tax on profits'. That procedure involved not only a White Paper on the subject but also considerable prior discussion with the Board of Inland Revenue by various interested bodies. The Council therefore suggests that, while prolonged discussions may not be possible, a White Paper on the subject should be produced as soon as possible so that due consideration may be given to the complicated legislation which will be necessary. The Council also suggests that, if at all possible, both corporation tax and capital gains tax should be dealt with under a separate Act so that they may be considered in more favourable circumstances than frequently obtain in Finance Bill debates.

In further support of the suggestion of a separate White Paper for corporation tax the Council points out that many companies are already in the first basis period for the tax. It cannot be considered satisfactory that they must make decisions without knowing how their tax liability will be affected.

The comments which follow are made with some reservation, having regard to the limited information available as to the proposals.

Corporation Tax

Basis of Charge

(a) The Council is pleased to note that the corporation tax when it is introduced is to be on an accounts basis and not on a preceding year basis.

Date of Fixing Rate

(b) In the recent White Paper entitled A Scheme for an Accounts Basis for Income Tax on Company Profits (Cmnd 2347) it was stated that the most important point to be kept in mind was that any scheme must be framed to preserve the power to increase or decrease the yield of tax at the earliest possible date. It would appear that the corporation tax liability will be a legal liability and not a provision for a future liability as is the case at present with income tax. In the view of the Council it is essential that when a company completes its accounts it should be in a position to provide for its legal liability for tax based on these accounts. The Council therefore urges that, despite the Chancellor's written reply of December 8th, 1964, this matter should be re-examined with a view to meeting this requirement.

Small Companies and Family Companies

(c) It is hoped that the complications arising with profits tax, where director-controlled companies are concerned, will not be perpetuated in the new tax and that, if the restrictions on directors' remuneration cannot be removed, the limits will be considerably increased.

Inter-company Holdings

(d) The Council feels it essential that any system of corporation tax must give full credit for any double taxation already suffered on a dividend received from another company in respect of the underlying corporation tax suffered by the paying company. It is noted that in the Chancellor's written reply of December 8th relief is to be restricted as regards investment trust companies and unit trusts to the extent to which the dividends are passed on to shareholders. This is in the Council's view inequitable. The Council also regrets that no mention has been made of any provision for relief of this type for trading companies with investment income (other than group companies). Further, where companies such as investment trust companies have no source of income other than dividends, and pay management expenses and interest charges, relief should be made available to them.

Double Taxation Relief

(e) Where overseas tax rates exceed corporation tax rates, which may be common under the new scheme, the Council considers that provision should be made for relief in respect of the excess. This could be arranged by giving the excess against the shareholder's liability to income tax deducted from dividends.

Dividends paid from Old Reserves

(f) The Council feels that inequity could arise where a company finds it necessary to maintain dividends out of past profits which have already borne both income tax and profits tax. It suggests that, where dividends are paid from pre-corporation tax profits, all corporation tax profits having been distributed, then the company should not be accountable to the Revenue for the income tax deducted from such a dividend.

Transitional Provisions

(g) The Council is aware that there will be many transitional difficulties in the introduction of the tax and regrets that it is impossible to make more detailed comments without a White Paper. It suggests, however, that particular attention should be paid to the problem of losses and capital allowances.

Capital Gains Tax

Valuation and Cost

(a) The Council is pleased to note the comment of the Chancellor in the House of Commons on October 24th, 1964, that any gain to be charged should be limited to the realized gain to the individual. The Council feels that difficulties may arise in establishing the cost and in particular would suggest that the burden of proof of cost be relaxed by some method where assets have been held more than (say) three years prior to the date of the commencement of the tax. The necessity for valuations at the 'appointed day' will, from a practical point of view, cause great difficulty and should be avoided in as many cases as possible. The alternative proposed by the minority Report of the Royal Commission on the Taxation of Profits and Income that the taxable gain be reduced to that fraction of the total gain which the period between the 'appointed day' and the date of realization bears to the total period of ownership (paragraph 69) would avoid valuations in a number of cases and should be granted as an alternative at the option of the taxpayer.

Rate of Tax

(b) The Council assumes that the rate of tax will be a flat rate tax and not a progressive tax, as it would be inequitable for a gain which had accrued over a number of years to be taxed on a progressive basis in one year.

Safeguards against Double Assesments

(c) The Council feels that a member of a close corporation should be entitled to deduct, in computing a capital gain, any income apportioned to him under a surtax direction where the surtax has been paid by him.

Special consideration should be given to the position of very small private companies, and the like, so that a charge is not made both on the company and on the shareholder. It might be relevant to point out at the same time the special position in Scotland of the partnership which is, in fact, a separate person in law.

It is hoped that some provision on the same lines as that recommended for corporation tax will be applied to capital gains in a group of companies. It is not thought equitable that if a capital profit is passed up through a group it should be taxed at more than one stage. This same problem arises in a slightly different form in the case of investment trust companies and unit trusts, which are really associations of investors who are seeking to obtain a spread of their investments.

Accountancy Charges

(d) While acknowledging a special interest in the matter, the Council feels that the computation of long-term gains will entail the keeping of many records which are not now required. It therefore recommends that accountancy and other charges (e.g. valuation fees) arising in connection with the computation should be allowed as an expense.

General Recommendations

(a) Additional complications will arise in connection with the proposed capital gains tax and corporation tax and an increase in anti-avoidance legislation will no doubt be involved. The Council therefore repeats its recommendations of earlier years that an expert body should be set up to which details of proposed schemes could be submitted in advance so that, if in the opinion of the expert body the proposals would be genuine business transactions, they would be exempted from any provisions concerning anti-avoidance legislation.

(b) The Council again repeats its recommendations of earlier years that the scope of capital allowances should not be restricted to industrial buildings.

(c) The Council feels that with the greater emphasis now laid on scientific and further education the scope of the allowances for educational projects should be widened.

(d) The Council has noted with interest the position in the recent House of Lords case of C.I.R. v. Frere ([1964] 3 W.L.R. 1193). It feels that the comments here highlight the problems and anomalies that arise in the payment of short interest and it hopes that some of these can be removed.

CONTRACT DEPRECIATION

for greater transport availability that leads to higher profits

Contract Depreciation assures you a dramatic reduction because your trucks are replaced automatically with new vehicles before large-scale overhauls or repairs are due. Your vehicles are on the road longer to earn you more, and your fleet remains modern and consistently economical in operation.

A number of other worthwhile advantages are yours with CD:-

- You get all the tax reliefs, including investment allowance
- No heavy capital expenditure
- Annual transport costs are accurately predictable – and consistently reduced
- You obtain a much clearer picture of your fleet's profitability
- Contract tenders can be more competitively estimated
- Tailor-made contracts mean fewer idle trucks or part loads
- Unprofitable administration time is cut to a minimum

Auditors' Reports on Group Accounts

SIR, – I was interested in the comments in your recent editorials of December 26th and January 9th, concerning auditors of holding companies and their opinions on group accounts in cases where they are not also auditors of subsidiaries which constitute a significant part of the group.

Although I would agree that fundamentally the problem is professional rather than legal, it may be of interest to those of your readers who may not be aware of it, that by South African law a 'legal' solution was thought to have been provided by an amendment, introduced in 1952, to the Companies Act. Subsection 99 bis (1) of that Act is precisely similar in its terms to subsection 162 (3) of the United Kingdom Companies Act but it is followed by a further subsection:

> '99 bis (2). Every auditor of a holding company shall have a right of access to all current and former accounts of any company subsidiary thereto and shall be entitled to require from the officers of the company such information and explanations in connection therewith as he may deem necessary.'

The auditor of a holding company in South Africa has thus a statutory right to obtain such information and explanations as he may require in regard to the accounts of subsidiaries; and therefore in most cases is in a position to report on the accounts of the group without reference to the fact that the accounts of subsidiaries or certain of them have not been audited by him. It is in fact a question as to whether an auditor of a holding company registered in South Africa, in view of the right given to him, would be entitled to make a qualification in his report on the accounts of a group unless he had been unable to obtain the information and explanations that he required. This might apply, for example, to the accounts of a subsidiary registered in a country other than South Africa as presumably the provisions of the subsection would not give an auditor the statutory right to obtain from its officers information and explanations concerning the accounts of a foreign subsidiary.

You state that it is a complex problem and that no doubt authoritative guidance would be forthcoming when an acceptable solution has been devised. As your readers know the point was examined (although apparently limited to the requirement on auditors, and not on officers, of a subsidiary to give information) by the Jenkins Committee but no recommendation was made. Experience in South Africa suggests that the additional statutory powers granted to the auditor of a holding company have gone a long way towards the solution of the problem. In most cases it avoids the requirement on the part of the auditor to introduce a qualification to or to make a statement in his report and thus avoids the report being hedged around with words, the real meaning and significance of which may not be understood or appreciated by shareholders and others. To suggest that there might be an alteration of the United Kingdom law to limit the responsibility of the auditor of a holding company is, I think, to side-step the issue. Would it not be preferable to extend his responsibility by giving him, as a first step at least, the additional right as in South Africa? From that point onwards, experience would indicate in what direction a better solution may lie.

Yours faithfully,

Johannesburg. W. B. DANKS.

[This topic is now, of course, the subject of a statement by the English Institute reproduced in The Accountant dated February 6th. – Editor.]

Dividend Withholding Tax and Non-residents

SIR, – I have read with much interest the series of articles on the proposed corporation tax, capital gains tax and dividend withholding tax, which appeared in the ten issues of your journal from December 8th to February 6th.

Although too many details of the new tax proposals are still unknown, your contributors have certainly given an admirable analysis of the things which might happen in future United Kingdom tax law.

While reading the last article, concerning the dividend withholding tax, however, and especially the paragraph entitled 'Non-residents' – the very last, of course – I was unable to agree with your contributor's thoughts completely.

The cause of this disagreement over the effects of the new dividend withholding tax on non-residents seems to revolve around the real character of this tax.

Although companies will be required to withhold income tax at the standard rate and to account to the Revenue for the tax so withheld, there can be little doubt that the tax withheld is a tax on the shareholder and not a tax on the company paying the dividend. This should follow from the statements made by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his November Budget speech and again on December 8th, in which he clearly proposed that the company will become liable to the new tax for its entire profits and cease to be liable to income tax, and that the shareholder will be liable to tax for the dividends received. In this way the same situation will arise in the United Kingdom as exists in many countries in continental Europe and elsewhere.

As a matter of fact, it is completely correct to add up the corporation tax and the income tax withheld for purposes of comparison between the 'old' and the 'new' tax burden on distributed profits, but in doing so, one should be aware that the character of the income tax has drastically changed.

This character of the dividend withholding tax plays an important part in the relation to non-resident recipients. If we really assume that it is a tax on the shareholder, the withholding will not be allowed, I think, under all those treaty provisions which state that dividends 'shall be exempt from any tax (in the United Kingdom) which is chargeable on dividends in addition to the tax chargeable in respect of the profits or income of the company'.

Re-negotiations will thus be necessary, not only if the United Kingdom would want to levy a reduced rate of dividend tax on non-resident recipients, but also if it wants to levy the tax at the standard rate, at least under this type of treaty provision. That the withholding tax will be allowed under other treaties, which exempt dividends from United Kingdom surtax only, may add a problem of inequity which in any case has to be solved.

Finally, as regards the position, tax-wise, of United Kingdom branches of overseas companies, I feel that it will not be easy to impose an extra tax on such branches, in order to cure the difference in tax burden between branches and subsidiaries, arising out of the dividend withholding tax.

Quite apart from the possible final solution of how the withholding tax will affect the non-resident shareholder, an extra tax burden on branches (either through 'deemed distributions' or through a higher tax rate) might come in conflict with the provisions in many treaties, which state that foreign enterprises shall not be subjected to any taxation which is either, higher or more burdensome than the taxation to which resident enterprises are or may be subjected. Such additional tax would also fail to appreciate the character of the dividend withholding tax being a tax on the shareholder.

Yours faithfully,
B. P. DIK,
Research Associate,
INTERNATIONAL BUREAU OF FISCAL DOCUMENTATION.
Amsterdam, The Netherlands.

[Our contributor writes:

It appears that Mr Dik has a legal approach to the new law, whereas I had taken an accounting approach. It is surely accepted that, under present law, the shareholder is not required to pay any United Kingdom income tax on dividends from United Kingdom companies. Similarly, under the new legislation, there will be no actual payment of tax by the individual shareholder.

At present, a United Kingdom company is liable to pay to the United Kingdom Inland Revenue 56·25 per cent in taxes. In future, the company will pay (say) 35 per cent, plus up to 26·8 per cent, depending on the company's distribution policy. I suggest, with respect, it is not important whether there is to be a tax 'on' the individual shareholders. The important points are that the company pays the tax and, if full distributions are made, at higher rates than at present, and the shareholders continue to receive dividends free of further income tax.

As regards tax treaties, a quick search shows that there are only four countries outside the Commonwealth which, under present treaties, are exempt from the new United Kingdom withholding tax on dividends – the Netherlands, Austria, Italy and Israel. Presumably, residents of these countries and most countries in the Commonwealth will be entitled to claim repayment of the withholding tax from the United Kingdom Inland Revenue. The withholding tax can, it seems, be levied in the case of other countries without offending the letter of the treaty. It is interesting to see that The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales have sent a memorandum to the Chancellor suggesting that non-resident shareholders should be exempted from the withholding tax.

It is not easy to impose a withholding tax on United Kingdom branches of non-resident companies and there may be conflicts under the treaties. I did suggest in the article that United Kingdom branches may be preferable to United Kingdom subsidiaries, since branches may be exempt from withholding tax.]

Tuition by Post

SIR, – Mr Pember's letter in your issue of February 6th begs many questions. Here are a few examples:

(1) What grounds has he for contending that most of the students who enrol for correspondence courses do so because they are unable to attend a suitable college? The fact is that many students find correspondence tuition best suited to their individual needs and rate of progress; indeed, a significant proportion study by this means on the recommendation of colleagues, employers and friends who themselves studied most successfully by this method.

(2) As to entrance tests, Mr Pember appears to overlook the fact that a great deal of the work of the leading correspondence colleges is the preparation of candidates for examinations conducted by professional bodies, as in the case of the accountancy profession, and the University of London. The examining bodies themselves set educational standards for admission as registered students and as prospective candidates. Therefore the question of an aptitude test does not arise, since a reputable college would insist on the student fulfilling the academic requirements laid down by the professional body before accepting the enrolment.

(3) Mr Pember's enthusiasm for day release and oral tuition is understandable, but should not blind him to the merits of sound instruction by correspondence and, even more important, its future possibilities. The fact is that the need for further education outstrips our resources and no single effective medium can or should be neglected. This Association believes that what is required is an up-to-date approach to the problem, a realization that in this country, as in others quoted by Mr Peterson in his forward-looking article in your issue of January 23rd, correspondence courses and correspondence colleges have an important contribution to make to further education.

Yours faithfully,
P. H. WOOD

Profitable Farming

SIR, – We shall be grateful if you will correct a mistaken impression which you give in your article on our book, Records for Profitable Farming, in the January 30th issue of The Accountant (page 120).

The trading account used in the example to which your article refers is similar to many from which advisory officers have, in the experience of one of the undersigned, had to prepare economic analyses of farm businesses. It is not the form of account which we recommend, and the accountancy charges are at a level which is clearly inadequate, but from experience in such cases, factual. The standard of management in this specimen left much to be desired.

The form of account which we recommend is shown later in the book – and the charges provided there for accountancy are more adequate.

Yours faithfully,
G. H. CAMAMILE.
Lincoln. T. W. D. THEOPHILUS.

Tax on Social Club's Funds

SIR, – I am auditor of the accounts of a social club whose finances, in the main, come from a limited company who regard the expense as providing an amenity for their employees, the company having some control over the affairs of the club.

The activities of the club are carried out at a loss but as, over the years, the company's contributions have exceeded the total amount of these losses there is a surplus of funds which is mainly invested in both ordinary and special accounts of a trustee savings bank.

It is desired to know whether the interest arising from the trustee savings bank accounts is liable to income tax.

Yours faithfully,
E. C.

[It would seem that the contributions from the company will be part of the income of the club which may not then have a loss for tax purposes. If there is no Case I loss, there will be liability under Case III on the untaxed interest.

If, however, there is a Case I loss after taking into credit the contributions of the company, section 341 relief will be available against the Case III liability for the same year or the year immediately following that in which the loss was suffered.

The exemption from tax in respect of interest on an ordinary account of the trustee savings bank applies only to individuals – Editor.]

Outgoing Shareholder

SIR, – Readers' opinions would be appreciated on the following problem. A wholesale business is carried on by a small private limited company, which has enjoyed a highly successful first year's trading.

A minority shareholder, holding twenty-five shares of £1 each out of a total issued share capital of £125, is due to retire and the remaining shareholders are buying the shares.

The balance sheet shows:

Fixed assets		1,500
Current assets	46,500
Less Current liabilities (including bank overdraft £20,000)	45,000
		1,500
Goodwill – not yet valued ..		—
		£3,000

Share capital issued	125
Profit and loss account – credit balance	150
Reserve for future taxation	2,725
	£3,000

The pre-tax profits for the first year's trading are £7,500, which appear to be maintainable.

The figure of £7,500 is after providing for £3,000 directors' remuneration.

Taking into account the extent of the borrowing from the bank, can readers advise on:

(1) the valuation to be placed on goodwill;
(2) the valuation to be placed on the minority shareholding of twenty-five shares.

Yours faithfully,
ENTERPRIZE.

Harrow and District Chartered Accountants' Discussion Group

SIR, – A discussion group has been formed under the auspices of the London and District Society of Chartered Accountants to serve the needs of the Harrow area, and the sponsors look forward to hearing from any chartered accountant, whether in practice or commerce, who would like to support this group.

For the time being, a general discussion group is envisaged with development into specialized groups as the numbers grow. Meetings are planned for the first Thursday in each month from October to May, to be held at the Headstone Hotel, Station Road, North Harrow, at 8 p.m.

Applications for membership will be welcomed by the secretary if sent to him at Observer House, St Ann's Road, Harrow, Middlesex.

Yours faithfully,
Harrow, Middx. A. G. ELLIOTT, F.C.A.

SHIPBUILDING INQUIRY COMMITTEE

Mr A. G. B. Burney appointed a Member

Mr A. G. B. Burney, O.B.E., B.A., F.C.A., a partner in the firm of Binder, Hamlyn & Co, Chartered Accountants, of London, has accepted an invitation by the President of the Board of Trade to serve on the Shipbuilding Committee of Inquiry.

The establishment of the committee, which is under the chairmanship of Mr Reay Geddes, O.B.E., managing director of the Dunlop Rubber Co Ltd, was announced in The Accountant of February 13th.

STOCK EXCHANGE SPECIAL

DAILY OFFICIAL LIST

The Council of the London Stock Exchange, in preparation for the Government's proposed capital gains tax, are publishing in book form the Daily Official List as published on Budget day, 1965, including securities quoted in the monthly supplement, showing the quotations at that date.

The Government, in announcing its intention to introduce a capital gains tax, indicated that for taxation purposes reference will have to be made to the value of the asset as on Budget day, 1965. The Council is publishing the Official List in book form because, in the event of legislation being passed following the introduction of this proposal in the Budget, a permanent record of the value of shares and securities as on Budget day 1965 will be required for many years to come.

The book will consist of 160 pages, price 20*s* (by post 21*s*), and copies may be obtained from the Stock Exchange Daily Official List, 14 Austin Friars, London EC2.

WAR DAMAGE OFFICE

The Technical Centre of the War Damage Office, Britannic Building, Fountain Street, Manchester 2, closed on February 26th. All correspondence should now be addressed to the Inland Revenue, War Damage Office, Eagle House, 57 Dale Street, Liverpool.

SW. LONDON DISCUSSION GROUP

The next meeting of the South-west London Discussion Group of Chartered Accountants will be held at 7.45 for 8 p.m. on Friday next at the Kingston College of Technology, Lecture Hall 201, when the subject will be 'Presentation of accounts' introduced by Mr R. M. R. Bence, A.A.C.C.A., F.C.W.A., A.C.I.S.

THE ACCOUNTANTS' CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP

The monthly meeting for Bible reading and prayer will be held at 1 p.m. on Monday, March 1st, in the vestry of St Mary Woolnoth Church, King William Street, London EC3. The scripture for reading and thought will be Ephesians, chapter 4, verses 14 and 15.

LOCAL HEALTH SERVICES

Financial information about local health services in 1963–64 published recently by The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants and The Society of County Treasurers in Local Health Services Statistics 1963–64, shows that £87·7 million was spent during the year on these services, an increase of £7·9 million, or 10 per cent, on the previous year.

The expenditure on services provided in the home by midwives, home nurses and health visitors accounts for nearly one-quarter of the total expenditure and the ambulance service for one-fifth. The fastest growing service is, however, mental health. Compared to 1962–63, expenditure on this service has risen by 24 per cent. On the other hand, expenditure on vaccination and immunization has fallen from the high point reached during the smallpox outbreak in 1961–62 when nearly £2·5 million was spent to below £1 million in 1963–64. The statistics also contain costing of certain other aspects of the local health service, including day nurseries and home helps.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS IN CANADA

The latest booklet in the 1964–65 series dealing with economic conditions in member and associated countries of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development has recently been issued covering Canada. Copies of the booklet are obtainable from H.M. Stationery Office, price 5*s* each.

THE ACCOUNTANT'S DIARIES

English Institute's Annual Meeting

As a consequence of alterations to the Royal Charter and bye-laws of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales authorized last autumn, the annual meeting of the Institute is no longer required to be held on the first Wednesday in May each year. Users of The Accountant's Diaries are accordingly advised that this year's annual meeting will be held on May 12th and not May 5th as at present indicated in the diaries.

CHIEF ACCOUNTANT for London (W1) based marketing subsidiary of international American concern. Qualified man 30–35, with experience outside profession. Commencing salary to £2,000 p.a. – Apply Stoy, Hayward & Co (Ref. C.E.S.), 97–99 Park Street, W1.

CHIEF ACCOUNTANT

A chartered accountant of outstanding ability, preferably not more than 40 years of age, is required by a public company in the North-west as prospective successor to the present Chief Accountant who is approaching retirement age. The company, which is an operating company with a large number of subsidiary and associated companies in the United Kingdom and overseas, has net assets exceeding £30,000,000 which are employed in manufacturing and every stage of merchanting.

The Chief Accountant is responsible to the board of directors for all financial and accounting arrangements of the group. A phase of rapid expansion and the decision to replace the present computer by one of the most advanced designs capable of handling several integrated programmes has made it necessary to initiate a comprehensive review of accounting methods throughout the group and the successful applicant will thus be able to influence at an early stage the shaping of the accounting system which he will later direct.

Applicants should have knowledge and practical experience of:

(a) industrial financial and cost accounting;
(b) modern techniques of management accounting for a large group of companies;
(c) investigation of businesses with a view to acquisition;
(d) training and control of office staff;
(e) U.K. and overseas taxation.

The commencing salary for this position will be commensurate with the high degree of practical knowledge, initiative and organizational ability which is required.

Applications should be addressed to Box CA7613.

CONDITIONS OF ACCEPTANCE OF CLASSIFIED ADVERTISEMENTS

1. The publishers cannot guarantee insertion on any specified date, but every effort is made to comply with advertisers' requirements.
2. The publishers will not be held liable for any loss occasioned by the failure of any advertisement to appear from any cause whatsoever.
3. The publishers will not accept responsibility for printing errors which may appear or for any consequences arising therefrom.
4. Box number addresses must not be used for the receipt of original documents, goods or payments of any kind, nor are they available for the distribution of canvassing matter. Any letter is liable to be opened for examination of its contents.
5. The right is reserved to refuse, cancel, suspend publication, or alter any advertisement which in the opinion of the publishers does not conform with recognized professional standards.

SALARIES AND LOCATIONS

Advertisers are invited to state in their advertisements the approximate salary range that they are prepared to give or require, and also their geographical location.

This will greatly assist those who propose answering advertisements and possibly avoid much unnecessary correspondence between advertisers and applicants.

BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION AND MANAGEMENT

by C. S. DEVERELL, M.A., B.SC.(ECON.), B.COM., F.C.I.S., A.M.B.I.M.

National Productivity Year was a singularly appropriate time for the appearance of this book, the more so as recent events have underlined the need to extend the most effective methods of management to the whole of our industry and commerce. Professional associations have recognized the urgency of this matter. Nor is the recognition limited to such bodies as the British Institute of Management and the Institution of Works Managers. The importance of business administration has been stressed in the revised examination scheme of the Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants, the Institute of Cost and Works Accountants, the Chartered Institute of Secretaries, and the Corporation of Secretaries. At the same time, many colleges of technology and commerce have introduced courses leading to Diplomas in Business Studies which require a knowledge of modern management techniques. University students engaged on B.Sc. Economics or similar courses are expected to acquire a sound basic understanding of the field. They, and all the students pursuing the courses mentioned here, should find the book invaluable.

EDUCATION NEWS LETTER

The Education Committee now issues a quarterly news letter to universities, colleges of further education, the Department of Education and Science and district and students' societies.

The committee's aim is to make its activities better known in the educational world and to provide a means for 'feed-back' of information and opinion to itself.

Copies of the first news letter are now available from the Institute. Future issues on a regular basis may be obtained on request.

ACCOUNTANTS (certified) WC1 require senior and semi-senior audit staff – varied practice with good opportunities for advancement. – Write stating age, experience and salary required to Box AC5170.

ACCOUNTANTS

THOMSON McLINTOCK & CO have vacancies in their London office for qualified accountants and recent finalists.

The range of work is varied and interesting. Initial appointment would be to the audit staff but there would be opportunities for investigations and other special work. Instruction in data-processing techniques and openings for specialization in management accounting and taxation are available after experience for selected candidates.

Starting salary depends on age and experience and an above-average rate would be paid to suitable applicants willing to enter a three-year agreement. Prospects for promotion within the firm are good. There is a contributory pension scheme and staff are entitled annually to three weeks' holiday and an additional three days' leave.

Applications should be addressed to the Staff Partner, 33 King William Street, London EC4.

A CITY FIRM of chartered accountants wishes to engage two qualified assistants – one newly-qualified and one with a year or two's professional experience since qualifying. The firm is of medium size, is expanding, and has a progressive outlook. The vacancies to be filled are on the audit staff and offer opportunities (a) for advancement within the firm 'to the top' for really keen men (who should be able to demonstrate their suitability therefore in two to three years), (b) for transfer within the firm or its associated firms to offices in the provinces or overseas; and (c) to specialize. Commencing salary for newly-qualified £1,250 per annum, plus luncheon vouchers; seven-hour day, five-day week, three weeks' annual holiday, superannuation scheme. – Please write for interview, submitting brief particulars of career to date, to Box AC7601.

When it doesn't pay to remain private

A stage is reached in the progress of many important private companies, when desirable growth, to continue expansion and meet competition, can no longer be financed solely from the company's own resources and those of the private owners. At this point, Kleinwort, Benson can advise upon and assist with raising necessary outside finance. At a still later stage a public flotation, bringing in the general investing public, can be the right answer. As one of the leading issuing houses, Kleinwort, Benson advises on means by which the needs of these different stages and all subsequent stages can be met.

How an I.C.T. 1900 Series computer heads the drive to save ratepayers' money

Ratepayers howl 'spendthrift' at the slightest provocation—so when it comes to shopping for a computer, Local Authorities especially are rigorously selective. Significant facts: no less than 18 of them ordered I.C.T. 1900 Series machines in the first 12 weeks after they were introduced. And 50% of all computers bought by Local Authorities since 1960 have been supplied by I.C.T. (12 are already fully operational and showing excellent results.) You may like to know some of the reasons for this tremendous vote of confidence.

Guarantee—you get the right computer. I.C.T. is a British Company with a team of over 100 Systems Analysts and Programmers who specialise in Local Government work. So you get the right computer—which will take over the work-load quickly and without fuss.

Maid-of-all-work! Local Government needs an expert maid-of-all-work, and that's just what an I.C.T. 1900 Series computer is. Its power can be harnessed to save hundreds of man-hours in almost any sphere of Local Government activity.

Fits like a belt! An I.C.T. 1900 Series computer fits your needs now, and can be adjusted whenever necessary to go on fitting.

Challenge! We say that an I.C.T. 1900 Series machine is the soundest long-term computer investment any Local Authority can make. (Note: the latest order, worth £400,000, is from the Berlin Senate.) Why not ask us to prove it to you, in detail?

The Local Government and Public Services Department of I.C.T. has representatives in all major cities in the U.K. For the name of your local manager, get in touch with either:

Association flays New Taxes

PERHAPS the most devastating attack yet made on the threatened new capital gains tax is contained in a memorandum which we reproduce on another page and which The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants has sent to the CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER. The Council of the Association makes a large number of very pertinent points and it is difficult to say which of them is the most telling. One patent weakness in the tax is that the CHANCELLOR has already admitted that certain arbitrarily chosen assets will be exempt from the charge; this is not so much a matter of logic as of expediency, and it at once makes the tax anomalous and unfair, while tending to drive investment into unnatural channels.

Another question asked by the Association which calls for an immediate answer is why losses will only be allowed to be carried forward. As the memorandum points out, many people have few assets. A man may sell an asset at a profit in year one and pay tax on it. Then in year three he is forced to realize perhaps his sole remaining asset at a loss. The loss will not qualify for relief because thereafter he has no more assets to dispose of. Another man, better endowed, is not driven to realizing his assets against his will, and can carefully arrange his disposals in order to obtain the maximum tax advantages. With a fine lack of logic the CHANCELLOR has indicated that losses on certain chattels will be limited in their qualification for relief. As the Association rightly comments, this 'Heads I win – tails you lose' attitude is hardly likely to endear people to the new tax.

The Association is hardly less scathing in another memorandum to the CHANCELLOR which we also reproduce and which deals with the vagaries of the new corporation tax. The Association has been a pioneer in the move towards a single tax on company profits, using the accounting period as the period of charge. But it says rightly that the new proposals of the CHANCELLOR, far from simplifying the position, are likely to result in considerable complication. It also questions the rightness of divorcing the taxation of the shareholder from that of his company, pointing out that in advanced countries where there is a corporation tax there are relieving provisions in respect of dividends to the shareholders.

Particularly apposite is the Association's comment about the CHANCELLOR's anxiety to discourage distributions by companies. It points out, quite rightly, that there is no guarantee that profits retained by a company will be more usefully invested than if they were first handed over to the shareholders.

Rating: Facts and the Future

THE appointment of a committee to investigate the impact of rates upon households was the product of the public outcry against the outcome of the 1963 revaluation. It is more than ironic that as the committee's findings are published, the announcement of rate poundages for the coming financial year 1965–66 has generated a fresh storm of protest. Unfortunately, the committee's report[1] offers neither consolation for current rateable values as set by the last revaluation, nor any prospect of rate relief for the vast majority of ratepayers in England and Wales. The report also covered Scotland, where the last valuation was held in 1961 and was more favourable to householders. The committee notes, however, that their main findings apply to all parts of Britain.

Although the committee received a large volume of evidence and, one suspects, criticism of the rating system and the 1963 revaluation from individuals and representative bodies, its report is based almost entirely on the findings of two large-scale sample surveys. The committee used the data for nearly seven thousand households collected in the 1961–63 family expenditure survey and undertook a further survey of its own in 1963. The results of the two inquiries from more than ten thousand households throughout Britain were then combined, although for some analyses the committee's own sample alone is used since it provided more details on specific issues of householders' finances and housing.

The report is essentially a statistical survey and makes no recommendations for future policy. The task of the committee under Professor R. G. D. ALLEN, himself a leading statistician, was 'to ascertain facts and to provide an objective and balanced account, supported by statistical evidence, of the impact of rates on households'. This the committee, aided by three statistical assessors, has done. Unfortunately, the massive documentation has not improved the readability of the report and, more especially in the later chapters, there are signs of rather hasty drafting since it is well known that the committee was under strong pressure to render a report without delay.

[1] Cmnd 2582. H.M.S.O. Price £1 10s 6d net.

The report may be divided into four main sections; an introduction dealing with the rating system and the present situation with special reference to the weight of rates in the fiscal system. A second section is devoted to the outcome of the 1963 revaluation and its consequences for different sections of the community. In the next section the relationship between rates and household incomes is examined and, in a final and the longest section, the committee consider the extent to which the rating system creates hardship. Public interest, not least at the present moment of time, will be concentrated upon three issues. First, to what extent does the committee find that the 1963 revaluation, which provoked so much resentment among certain classes of ratepayer, warranted such a reaction. Second, to what extent is the criticism that the rate is an 'unfair' tax justified, and lastly, how much hardship does the rate demand upon householders actually create? These questions may now be answered.

On the 1963 revaluation the critics are, for all practical purposes, snubbed by the committee. The revaluation introduced consistency in valuation and was not detrimental to householders as a class. There were admittedly wide variations between different areas and also differences between householders. Thus, looking at the problem regionally the committee found that London and the South-east had the largest increases in rateable values. In the metropolis, the residents of St Marylebone, Paddington and Westminster were the worst affected but, as with the residents in some southern areas, the increases in rateable value largely replaced the reductions which they had enjoyed as a result of the 1956 valuation which, the committee notes, had been especially favourable to householders.

Reviewing the actual rate increases sustained by householders as a result of the revaluation, the average increases ranged from modest reductions in some rating areas to rises of over £34 in Westminster. But, on the whole, the average rate increases were quite modest and even the top 10 per cent of the increases did not always range above £10 per annum. The committee finds that postwar bungalows and flats in the areas of high population incidence experienced sharp increases. It had been widely contended in the post-revaluation debate that such increases had hit retired householders with especial severity, but the committee finds that only 10 per cent of such households lived in this type of accommodation. Furthermore, since one in seven had incomes over £20 per week, indeed the average income for this group was actually over £2,000 per annum, to the extent they did occupy post-1945 properties, they could well afford the rate charge!

On the second question, concerning the relationship of rates to income, the committee affirms that the rate is a regressive tax. Whereas the lowest income group with under £6 per week pay about 8 per cent of their income in rates, the highest income group with £30 per week or more pay just over 2 per cent. On the other hand, the committee demonstrates with voluminous statistics that the amount of rates paid depends predominantly upon the size and location of dwellings and that there is a good correlation between income and the type of accommodation. In other words, the higher the income, the higher – generally speaking – is the rate payment. In any case, it is worth noting that the rate charge in relation to the average income of manual workers, i.e. £20 per week, and salaried workers, £24 per week, is, according to the findings of the committee, under 2½ per cent. The position in Scotland is rather different in so far as rates for the poorest group take up to 10 per cent of income, and just over 2 per cent for the richest. On the other hand, rents and housing costs are much lower so that, although rates in Scotland are higher than in England and Wales, the combined rent and rates payment south of the border is, in general, higher.

The committee clearly felt that there was little evidence of hardship for households with earning heads although, as its detailed tabulations show, there are considerable variations in rate payments between different areas. Generally speaking, rates are highest in the South-east, where they average £38 per annum, even higher than in London (£32) and lowest in the North (£23). The average owner-occupier paid £37 per annum, or £9 more than the council tenants who in their turn paid £7 more than private tenants. On the other hand, council tenants enjoyed much more modern accommodation which, in consequence, had a much higher rateable value. The Committee's main conclusion, as far as the average earning household was concerned, was that the adoption by all councils of a 'pay-as-you-earn' system of rate payments would avoid much of the resentment generated by the present system of lump-sum demands.

By far the most important findings of the committee came in the final section where it examined the extent of hardship. The most striking feature of a classification of the retired and earning householders is that well over half of the former were in the lowest income groups receiving less than £10, and many of them less than £6 per week. This class of ratepayer occupied in the main a privately owned rented terrace house built pre-1915 on which the rates were only a few shillings per week. Their hardship was thus only marginally connected with rates. Already over one and a half million households are receiving their rent and/or rate payments from the National Assistance Board. While this is undoubtedly necessary, the committee notes that this practice enables many of these households to continue occupying accommodation very much larger than they need. Nearly 60 per cent of single person households have five rooms or more, while 30 per cent have six or more rooms.

The committee estimates that between five hundred thousand and eight hundred thousand more households would appear to be entitled to assistance from the N.A.B. but here again the rate charge is only a marginal factor in creating their poverty. It is noteworthy that nearly one-quarter of the retired householders living in detached or semi-detached houses receive national assistance.

The significance of the committee's findings extends far beyond the immediate problem of local government finance. The scale of poverty and hardship which the survey has brought to light necessitate early and prompt action by the Government. Mr CROSSMAN's recent comments on the possibilities of replacing the rate as a major source of income for local authorities may gladden the hearts of the electorate. Unfortunately, the simple arithmetic of Government expenditure and current tax revenues make it clear that the scope for relieving the ratepayer by larger Exchequer grants is decidedly limited.

An Integrated 'Capital Employed' Policy

CONTRIBUTED

IT is a symptom of the ever-increasing popularity of programmes of diversification that the boards of management in companies engaging in this form of business exercise tend to have less and less first-hand experience of the trading activities carried on by their companies, and come to rely more and more upon the financial analyses of the results achieved produced by the accountant. The accountant is called upon to solve, by financial formulae, problems, such as 'Will it pay us to purchase new equipment?', 'Will it be more profitable for us to invest in new machinery or in an additional salesman?', or 'Will the purchase of X.'s business increase the profitability of the company if concluded at the negotiated price?'

The Victorian entrepreneur would have answered these questions using his intimate knowledge of the trade and the problems facing his own business. The questions 'What are we going to get out of it?' and 'Is it enough?', which are today directed at the accountant in respect of most capital expenditure proposals, are translated in modern accounting terminology into the phrases 'What will be the rate of return on capital employed?' and 'Is the anticipated rate of return on capital employed satisfactory or not?'

The whole question of profitability and its measure, 'the rate of return on capital employed', stem from the basic facts that money is invested in businesses to earn profits greater than can be achieved by investing money in gilt-edged securities, that all businesses wish to expand and are, therefore, continually in need of more money and that more money will not be forthcoming unless the profitability of the enterprise is high enough to attract further investment.

The problem confronting the accountant is to express:

(1) the requirements of the investors;
(2) the rate of return on capital employed by the company as a whole; and
(3) the benefits to be derived from individual capital expenditure proposals; in a single medium, that is, in terms of a measurement which can be applied to each of the three concepts.

Textbooks dealing with methods of evaluating these three aspects of profitability usually deal with each aspect separately, discussing the advantages and disadvantages of the various methods of evaluation. Articles in accounting and financial periodicals are frequently even more limited and more often than not discuss one particular area of dispute of one particular method of evaluating one of the three aspects of profitability; for example, several articles and letters to the editor are written discussing the arguments for and against the inclusion of fixed assets in the computation of capital employed at cost or at written down value.

This article is an attempt to pick from the various methods of evaluating each of the three aspects of profitability, a simple method for each aspect which will measure the three aspects in relation to a single problem in terms which are strictly comparable, so that decisions which are to be based upon the relationship of the three aspects of profitability can be taken. It is proposed to start this analysis of the problem by enumerating the various methods currently being advocated for evaluating each of the three aspects of profitability; to follow this with a decision as to the measurement to be used in evaluation; and to finish with a selection from the various methods of evaluating each aspect the method which expresses that aspect of profitability in terms of the measurement recommended.

Methods of Evaluating the Three Aspects of Profitability

The first aspect of profitability, hitherto referred to as the 'requirements of investors', deals with the question as to what is the minimum profitability that is acceptable if the expectations of the investors in the company are to be satisfied. This question could be phrased 'What is the cost of our capital?' Alternatively, as a result of the large incidence of owner-managers in industry and commerce, this question is often phrased 'What ought I to earn upon the capital which I have invested in the company'? These questions are not strictly similar and as a result the two current methods of evaluating the cost of, or requirements of, capital which are based upon these two questions, tackle the problem from different angles.

The first method, based upon the question

'What is the cost of our capital?', calculates a weighted average cost of capital based upon the proportion of the total capital employed in the business represented by each individual source of capital, and the cost of each individual source of capital based upon the return expected by the supplier of such capital. In this method the total capital employed is defined as the total capital contributed whether by equity investors in the form of share capital and retained earnings or by debenture holders or banks on a short-term or long-term loan basis. Retained earnings for this purpose should be defined to include not only the capital and revenue reserves of the company but also the unpaid appropriations of profit in the shape of reserves for future taxation and provisions for proposed and current taxation. The cost of these individual sources of capital is based upon the return expected by the providers of such capital; the cost of long-term and short-term loans is the yield to redemption promised to the lenders; the cost of the equity capital will be the net of tax dividend yield plus the rate of growth in such dividend yield expected in the future.

The rate of growth referred to above may be calculated by multiplying the proportion of net earnings retained by the estimated net of tax earnings which will be obtained from the retained earnings. There are, however, bound to be circumstances where the investing public, in fixing the market value, is basing its expected rate of growth, not upon the retained earnings, but upon such non-financial matters as an anticipated boom in the popularity of the company's products or confidence in the management of the company. In such circumstances, an intelligent guess has to be made to arrive at the rate of growth expected by the equity shareholders.

The second method of evaluating the cost of capital bases its calculations upon the amount of risk inherent in the activities undertaken by the company. In this calculation the return expected from non-risk bearing securities, for example, gilt-edged securities, is taken as a starting-point and to the starting-point is added an additional loading considered adequate to compensate the provider of the capital for the risk undertaken.

Evaluating Benefits from an Individual Capital Project

The evaluation of the benefits to be derived from an individual capital expenditure project has been achieved by widely differing methods which must have derived from questions ranging from the complex 'What rate of interest on the outstanding capital investment can we afford to pay in respect of this project based upon the estimated net cash flows, if we are not to lose money, and is this rate of interest higher or lower than the cost of capital?', 'Are the increases in profits which we are going to receive as a result of the purchase of X.'s business worth more to us than the purchase price we are being asked to pay given our present cost of capital?', through the less complex 'How do the anticipated profits on this project measure up against the capital tied up in the project?' or 'How long will it take us to get our money back?', to the very simple question 'Can it wait?' These questions have given rise to the following methods of evaluating the profitability of capital expenditure projects:

(1) The rate of interest which can be afforded by a project is calculated by discounting the net cash flows[1] generated by the project and expressing these net cash flows as a yield on the initial outlay. Under this method the rate of interest is the solution r to the equation:

$$C=\frac{A_1}{(1+r)}+\frac{A_2}{(1+r)^2}+\frac{A_3}{(1+r)^3}\cdots\frac{An}{(1+r)^n}$$

In this equation, C equals the initial capital outlay, A_1 equals the net cash flows in the first year of the project, A_2 equals the net cash flows in the second year of the project and so on; n is taken to represent the last year of the project.

(2) The capital to be invested in a project is compared with the value of the project at the time of decision based upon the current cost of capital by expressing the discounted net cash flows generated by the project in terms of the cost of an annuity to produce such cash flows. The value of the project at the time of decision is the solution P to the equation:

In this equation, A_1 equals net cash flow in the [1] Net cash flows are calculated as follows:

Sales and other operating revenue
Deduct Cost of sales, including administration and selling costs, but excluding charges for depreciation and interest
Add Proceeds of the sale of fixed assets ..
Decreases in net working capital ..
Miscellaneous receipts
Deduct Capital expenditure (e.g. on replacements)
Increase on net working capital ..
NET CASH FLOW	£

first year, A_2 equals net cash flow in the second year, and so on; r equals the cost of capital.

(3) The expression of the anticipated profits arising out of a project as an annual return on the capital employed in the project is achieved by estimating the profits after deduction of depreciation which will arise during the life of the project, dividing such anticipated profits by the number of years for which the project is to continue to arrive at an annual rate of profits, and expressing the annual rate of profits as a percentage of the capital invested in the project. In computing the capital invested in the project, there exists considerable argument as to whether the fixed assets should be included on an original cost basis throughout the length of the project or on an average cost basis, that is, on a cost less provision for depreciation basis.

(4) The measurement of the time which it will take for a company to recover in full the money which it has laid out on a capital expenditure project under what is known as the 'pay-back' method of investment appraisal is computed by estimating the time it will take for the incremental net cash flows generated by the project to equal the initial outlay. This type of appraisal has distinct advantages where the project contemplated is in fields of activities which are liable to sudden upheavals due to technological developments or fashion changes.

(5) The question 'Can it wait?' more often asked by managers pressed for time than as a means of assessing the attractiveness of the proposal on the basis of urgency, has given rise to what is known as the 'necessity-postponability' method of investment appraisal. This method which bases the attractiveness of proposals on the time available for decision can only conceivably have value when assessing projects involving the replacement of assets, non-replacement of which would damage the existing business of the company.

The Rate of Return on Capital Employed earned by the Company as a Whole

The assessment of the rate of return on capital employed currently being earned by a company stems from a desire to know what the company is actually earning on the money invested in the company, whether the profitability of the enterprise has changed since the previous year, whether the rate of return is comparable with the rate of return being earned by competitors and, finally, whether the capital expenditure proposals submitted for approval will increase or decrease the rate of return of the capital employed in the company as a whole. The more conventional methods of calculating the rate of return on capital employed relate the trading profits achieved by the enterprise to the average capital employed by the company during the financial year, usually based on the mean of the balances at the beginning and end of the financial year. Divergencies result in practice when this method is applied from the following arguments:

(1) Should the capital employed be based upon a 'gross' or 'net' basis, that is, should there be deducted from the fixed assets, stock and work in progress, debtors and cash employed in the business, the trade creditors and other provisions for accrued expenses etc.?

(2) Should the valuation of the fixed assets included in the capital employed be based upon the original cost to the business of the assets employed or the cost of replacing those assets by new assets at the date of calculation?

(3) Should the valuation of fixed assets for inclusion in the computation of capital employed be based upon original cost or on the written down values of the assets?

(4) Should the profits to be related to the average capital employed be computed after deduction of a charge for depreciation based upon original cost or upon replacement cost?

These areas of dispute have produced in practice several means of computing the rate of return on capital employed.

However, it is also possible to treat the company as an individual capital expenditure project, and to calculate the rate of interest which it could afford to pay on the initial investment without making a loss by discounting the net cash flows generated by the company. There are difficulties in this method, arising mainly out of the choice of a suitable starting date and the measurement of the initial investment. However, where C equals the initial investment, A_1 equals the net cash flow generated by the company in the first year, A_2 the net cash flow of the second year, etc., and C_1 and C_2 equal the net residual value of the business computed on the same basis as the initial investment but at the end of the first year and the end of the second year, then the return on capital employed will be the solution r in the equations:

(1) For a period of one year: $$C = \frac{A_1 + C_1}{(1+r)}$$

(2) For a period of two years: $$C = \frac{A_1}{(1+r)} + \frac{A_2 + C_2}{(1+r)^2}$$

The formula can be extended to cover periods of as many years as desired, and it is also possible to start a new series each year and to compare the rates of return on capital employed disclosed by each series with the cost of capital computed at the date of the commencement of the series.

Selection of a Common Form of Measurement

Consideration of the various methods of evaluating the three aspects of profitability make it quite clear that the only common measurement which can be applied to each is a 'rate of interest', which, in the case of the requirements of investors, will express the rate which the investors expect to receive and which in the case of capital expenditure proposals and the company's activities as a whole, expresses the rate which the individual capital expenditure proposal and the company as a whole can afford to pay. Where the rate which an individual capital expenditure proposal and a company's overall activities can afford to pay is higher than the rate of interest expected by the investors, then prima facie, the proposals and the company's trading activities are attractive propositions.

Recommended Integrated 'Capital Employed' Policy

The following methods should be used as a basis of evaluating the three aspects of profitability contained in all capital expenditure problems.

(1) When assessing the minimum profitability which is acceptable, the method to be used should be based upon the question 'What is the cost of our capital?' It should, therefore, involve the computation of the weighted average cost of capital previously outlined on page 305. The alternative method there outlined fails to take into account the differing costs of different sources of capital and, accordingly, does not measure minimum levels of acceptable profitability calculated in accordance with the capital structure. It further fails as a means of assessing the effects of various methods of obtaining further finance on the acceptable minimum level of profitability.

(2) In evaluating the benefit to be derived from a capital expenditure proposal, the rate of interest which could be afforded by the proposed project should be calculated by discounting the estimated net cash flows to be generated by the project and expressing these net cash flows as a yield on the initial outlay as described in method (1) on page 305. The methods of investment appraisal described in methods (2), (4) and (5) do not measure attractiveness of a proposed project in terms of a 'rate of interest' and therefore are incapable of ready comparison with the cost of capital. The rate of return on capital employed calculated by means of the method (3) although expressed as a percentage, is not the rate of interest which can be afforded by the project as no account is taken in the calculation of the incidence of capital outlays and net cash flows and one of the basic ingredients in the calculation of interest is time.

(3) In computing the rate of return on capital employed currently being earned by a company, we are interested in ascertaining whether a company could afford to pay a 'rate of interest' on the capital employed in the business equal to or higher than the rate of interest expected by the investors in the company. The rate of interest expected by investors is based largelyon the net dividend yield at a given date and the expected growth from that date. The computation of the rate of interest which the company could afford should be effected by treating the company as an individual capital expenditure project and should be based upon a suitable evaluation of the initial investment[1] at the given date and upon the net cash flows generated by the company since that date, as described on page 306.

Conclusion

The recommended integrated 'capital employed' policy leans very heavily upon the equation:

$$C=\frac{A_1}{(1+r)}+\frac{A_2}{(1+r)^2}+\frac{A_3}{(1+r)^3}\cdots\frac{An}{(1+r)^n}$$

which enables future net cash flows to be discounted and expressed as a yield on an initial outlay C. The writer is not unaware that this is not the easiest calculation to do, nor is he unaware

BALANCES AT APRIL 1ST, 1964

Fixed assets at replacement cost
Deduct Provision for depreciation calculated as follows: Replacement cost less residual value $\times \frac{\text{age}}{\text{estimated life}}$
Add Net working capital:
Stock and work in progress ..
Debtors
Cash in hand
Less Trade creditors:
Provision for accrued expenses
Specific provisions
Initial investment at April 1st, 1964	£

that there can be circumstances when its application may not be the most suitable, for example, where it is estimated that there will be negative net cash flows in the later years of a project[1]. There will always be exceptions in such a complicated area of analysis and in the writer's opinion, the overall scheme proposed appears to overcome more of the problems of capital expenditure control by expressing the results of evaluations of profitability in comparable terms, than methods which do not have this advantage.

Finally, it should be pointed out that the non-inclusion of methods of profitability evaluation in the overall scheme proposed should not be taken as an absolute refutal of the merits claimed for these methods. Rather, it is an indication that, perhaps, their uses may be restricted and that certainly the measurement of profitability obtained is not easily comparable with the results of other methods.

The Company Auditor

A Re-appraisal of Judicial Dicta and a Proposal for Legislative Re-orientation

by
C. A. WHITTINGTON-SMITH, LL.M., F.C.A.

IT has for long been a comfortable doctrine to the company auditor that:

> 'It is no part of an auditor's duty to give advice either to directors or shareholders as to what they ought to do. . . . It is nothing to him whether the business of a company is being conducted prudently or imprudently, profitably or unprofitably . . . the duty of an auditor is not to arouse inquiry . . . .'

These words, pronounced in the Court of Appeal in 1895, by Lindley, L.J., in Re The London and General Bank, seem to have lost little, if any, of their popularity with the passage of time, and in the annals of auditing and accountancy are so famous as to be almost hallowed. To question them is as blasphemy against Holy Writ.

Diminishing Returns

Yet the time comes when judicial dicta – however fine their vintage – begin to deteriorate if only because of changing conditions and the need for a re-orientation of the law in the face of new problems. Probably few aspects of the practising accountant's work today present more problems than auditing; partly because auditing as a science has stood still for too long, tending to become a technique in the exercise of which we are too prone to bask in the sunshine of our own approbation; and by resting, as it were, on our professional laurels, we have developed a blinkered mind that is shielded from reality by over-reliance on judicial dicta which, however valuable as statements of the law at the time of their pronouncement, have a diminishing relevance.

Consider, for example, many of the dicta on the law relating to the divisibility of profits and the extent to which legal requirements in this matter have become one thing and the dictates of financial prudence another.

The worst feature of many of these dicta at the present day is their influence, begun in those who were articled clerks, in developing a kind of professional defence mechanism that is resistant to change – especially where concepts of professional responsibility are concerned. That may be in part because some kinds of change, e.g. that resulting from the mechanization of accounting and the increasing use of automation are forced upon us from without, whereas in the field of professional responsibility change is essentially conceptual and largely a matter of accepting new standards of performance which can receive legal sanction only through the work of reformers.

It may be true that the reformers of one generation simply provide the conservatives of the next. Nevertheless, each generation of conservatives ought to be producing reformers and though to the auditor – above all men – caution is a virtue, it can reach a point at which its effects are positively stultifying. This, however, may be one reason why the auditor's position in the general scheme of things has in many ways become so static as to leave him further and further behind in the march of economic and accounting progress. Yet his training was never more arduous, and his skill – as indicated by the criterion of examination syllabuses – never greater. On the other hand, his reluctance to widen the scope of his duties to meet the needs of rapidly changing conditions is as great as ever if we judge, for example, from the conservative nature of the evidence submitted by the professional accountancy bodies to the Jenkins Committee on Company Law Amendment which published its official report in June 1962.

Need for Radical Re-thinking

At the back of the auditor's mind, of course, the lurking realization that increased duties can only bring increased legal responsibilities may be almost a phobia; nevertheless, the need for some radical re-thinking in the approach to his work is clamant. For comfortable dicta and old shibboleths no longer suffice to protect him from the need to realize that he, and he alone, is in a uniquely privileged position to give advice; not only as a highly qualified and independent officer of the company he serves but also, in a very real sense, as an organ of the company distinct from shareholders and directors alike.

The office of auditor, then, could be made far more realistic in this day and generation by requiring him to fulfill, more adequately than at present, that positive and constructive role for which he is qualified both professionally and by reason of his wide experience of different businesses.

A Proposed Enactment

What is suggested, is that he should be given statutory but discretionary powers to give advice whenever he could do so in the best interests of the company. He himself must, of course, be the sole arbiter of this; but instead of the observations he often does, in fact, already make to directors – perhaps in the form of a letter on completion of his audit which is, of course, 'unofficial' and extra-statutory – they would in future be made as part of his duty to give advice and thus would in many cases be more readily forthcoming, to the advantage of directors and shareholders alike. It is accordingly suggested that some provision on the following lines should be prescribed when the present Companies Act is amended, in addition to the amendments already proposed in the report of the Jenkins Committee:

> 'The auditors shall also report to the directors and/or members of the company on any matter which in the opinion of the auditors is conducive to the preservation or furtherance of the financial well-being of the company and shall give such advice, if any, as in their opinion is requisite or desirable in the best interests of the company.'

There is, perhaps, a shifting of emphasis here in that the interests of the company, qua company, are to be paramount. At the same time, there is to be no weakening of the auditor's responsibility to report to shareholders though it might at times be an ultimate rather than an immediate responsibility. It has, of course, always been a moot point in English law whether the auditor is an agent of the shareholders; and though there is, perhaps, a sense in which he is essentially their servant, he is certainly not the servant of the directors. But analogies from the law of agency and the law of master and servant are, it is suggested, of less significance than the view of the auditor as an organ of that living entity, the company, of which shareholders and directors, in each case collectively, are also individual organs of what should be an essential unity.

The proposal is no doubt in some ways revolutionary; but this must probably be true of any reform which is really substantial. Its legal implications might, at least for a time, be problematical. But they need not be frightening. Indeed fear, like fire, is a good servant but a bad master; and it is perhaps fear of possible consequences for themselves which, rather than anything else, has for too long caused successive generations of auditors to be too complacent in allowing judicial dicta to dominate their thought, and to keep to themselves in the course of their professional work, thoughts and ideas which, translated into action, could have been helpful and constructive.

No board of directors worth its salt would ever resent the kind of advice and constructive proposals that are envisaged and the old tag that the 'onlooker sees most of the game' is no doubt particularly true of the auditor in the practice of what present-day economists sometimes call 'the business game'.

The Golden Mean

The auditor would still have an independent and unique vantage point but would be empowered at his discretion to make, as of right, a helpful suggestion or two to those in the boat. There would be no question of his attempting to steer the course by remote control or tell others who know better how to do their job. There would, however, in appropriate circumstances, be an occasional word of skilled financial advice usually, perhaps, at the level of policy rather than at the administrative level.

This proposed new right of the auditor would, no doubt, in any event, be used but sparingly; but its existence, it is suggested, could first, do much to make the auditor's part in the life of a company more positive and constructive than it often is at present, and secondly, further in at least one direction those logical developments which must take place if the science of auditing is to keep abreast of modern conditions and the needs of the times. One cannot help but wonder how many companies could in past years have made greater profits on the one hand, or have been saved from financial disaster on the other, if it had been part of their auditor's duty to give advice and that advice had been duly applied.

The question is hypothetical but the answer may well be legion; if so, the moral can only be that the sooner such a proposed change could be made, so much the better for the well-being of many individual businesses as well as the country at large.

Old and New Images

There are still too many circles in which the auditor is regarded as a kind of professional checker whose essential duty is confined to an examination of books and vouchers; a kind of policeman on the beat at the end of the day when things are quiet and, notebook and pencil in hand, he can have everything to himself. In current jargon, it is high time the auditor's image was improved, but the improvement will come about only when he faces up to the realities of the present situation and abandons the ultra-conservative attitude which has neglected to meet the needs of that situation. In other words, as already suggested he should supplement his analytical and critical functions by not only reporting whether the view shown by annual accounts is true and fair but also by giving, as a financial expert, any advice which appears to him to be needed to conserve or improve the company's financial health. In this way he would, of course, assist in projecting into present and future accounts a view that is fair not only in the sense of being equitable and free from bias but also in the sense of being financially sound and free from blemish. This is no mere rhetoric or logomachy. The omission to do this has already resulted in territory which could easily have belonged to the professional auditor being encroached upon by others; not least by the business consultant.

It is essential, then, for the profession to free itself as quickly as possible from the bondage of judicial dicta and the cramping effect of case law that has largely lost its significance and which, in this particular field, has undoubtedly hampered necessary legislative development. And it is essential also to inject into auditing procedure something of the new approach in accounting that recognizes that the real relevance of historical accounts is to be found chiefly in the uses they may have as an index or key to present and future performance. The auditor now needs much more than the attitude of a clinician and must be prepared to function accordingly in a wider context than purely historical reporting within a framework of double entry.

A Sociological Viewpoint

The managerial revolution of recent years also has implications for the auditor, since a widening gap between proprietorship and management in company affairs plus a greater spread of share ownership is giving rise to quasi-sociological problems which greater responsibilities on the part of auditors might do much to alleviate. There is, moreover, an increasing consciousness that workers, too, have in a very real sense a kind of capital investment, in the form of their personal skill, in the business which employs them. Fuller reporting by the auditor (on lines suggested, for example, in an earlier article by the present writer)[1] coupled with a widening of responsibility on his part as an independent officer of the company, might again make an important contribution to the country's well-being in facilitating or strengthening good relations between management, shareholders, and workers.

An Apparent Paradox

In auditing, as in accounting, the emphasis is increasingly on two things, (1) financial efficiency and (2) operational efficiency. On every hand there is a growing demand in both these spheres for the objective, quasi-judicial assessment and guidance that the trained professional auditor is in a uniquely advantageous position to provide. Yet the extraordinary paradox as between accounting and auditing is that whilst the former dichotomy between financial accounting and costing accounting is fast disappearing through, inter alia, the growing integration of both types of accounting on the basis of a functional analysis in budgeting and the consequent translation of managerial responsibility into terms of profit or loss, signs are not wanting that there is something of a reverse trend in auditing and that the more functional aspects of the subject are becoming the rather exclusive prerogative of the internal auditor and the efficiency expert. But the work of the professional auditor and the internal auditor should be complementary, not mutually exclusive, since the financial and functional aspects of auditing are in many ways as closely related as the obverse and the reverse of a single coin. In both types of auditing there is a desperate need for increased specialization but nothing can be more detrimental to the progress of either than a secluded outlook.

This, however, raises problems not germane to the present article: suffice it to say that professional education and training on broad, general lines is an essential preliminary to the development of any particular specialism and that there can be few professions with a more urgent need than our own for a greater measure of educational co-ordination.

More Budget Representations

Federation of British Industries

THIS year the representations sent by the Federation of British Industries to the Chancellor of the Exchequer are in three groups: those on the Budget in general, those on the corporation tax, and those on the new capital gains tax. The last two groups of representations closely resemble those sent in already by other bodies qualified to speak with authority on these topics. If the Chancellor fails to avoid the anomalies and inequities which potentially threaten, it will not be for want of being told about them.

On the Budget in general the Federation asks for less, not more, tax on income and profits, and more on consumption. It says there is scope for broadening the base of the still selective indirect taxes. This would be helpful for exports and for industrial investment and effort. The heavy oils duty should be repealed and an allowance given for commercial buildings. Payments to educational and charitable institutions by traders should be treated on a more liberal basis in the computation of profits for assessment purposes. There should be unilateral tax credit for notional overseas tax which the overseas territory has forgone as a 'pioneer relief'.

The Institute of Taxation

THE Council of the Institute of Taxation have some very apt things to say in their memorandum to the Chancellor on his coming Budget. As with other Budget representations, pride of place is given to those ugly sisters, capital gains tax and corporation tax. Disclaiming any concern with political considerations of Government policy, the memorandum accepts the capital gains tax as practically a fait accompli and concentrates on smoothing the difficulties. It asks for care in the framing of the rules, and for generous exemptions in order to reduce the burden on all – Inland Revenue staff, accountants, valuers, and the taxpayers themselves. The Institute understands that the existing short-term gains tax will be repealed, although even about this there is no kind of certainty.

Like The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants, the Institute would like to see the corporation tax made a good deal simpler than official announcements have indicated. The Institute's own solution, like the Association's, is the replacement of profits tax by an income tax levied on the profits of an accounting period, and at a somewhat higher rate than the standard rate. The memorandum also presses for the same abolition of basis periods in relation to other income, including that of individuals. This was much canvassed before the Royal Commission, but the Inland Revenue's memorandum at the time about the difficulties then seemed to carry the day.

The idea of taxing the same profits twice does not seem to appeal very strongly to the Institute. It suggests that if the corporation tax plus the dividend tax for a particular company would exceed a certain defined rate, then the corporation tax ought to be scaled down. To maintain the benefit of double tax relief and capital allowances as conceived under the old system, the Institute suggests (as many others have done) that these reliefs be stepped up. On surtax directions, and the Chancellor's anxiety to discourage distributions, the memorandum comments somewhat dryly that:

> 'A policy of inducement to retain profits in some companies and to distribute them in others, calls for a simplified and more definite policy than exists at present.'

Like many others, the Institute is extremely disappointed by the complex provisions of Case VIII which have appeared, instead of a simple provision to treat rents in the same way as trades. It also reiterates its criticism of the appeal system under which a taxpayer who has only a small amount at stake is involved in heavy legal expenses because the point happens to be of special interest to the Revenue, whose funds for litigation, unlike the taxpayer's, are inexhaustible. The memorandum contains pleas for wider publication of extra-statutory concessions, for a liberalization of error and mistake relief, for the reversal of the unfortunate Sharkey v. Wernher decision, and for an increase in certain estate duty exemptions in order to take account of the fall in the value of money.

Industrial Bankers Association

MANY finance companies are now providing instalment credit under tax saving schemes whereby the customer pays the charges (i.e. the interest) less income tax at the standard rate. How is this to be dealt with when the new corporation tax is imposed on the companies' profits? This is one of the many interesting points made in a memorandum to the Chancellor which the Industrial Bankers Association has sent in response to an invitation from the Bank of England. Its own solution is that the amount of tax deducted should be set off against the companies' own corporation tax. As lessors of plant and machinery, finance houses are particularly concerned with the maintenance of the value of capital allowances; they suggest that the corporation tax be accompanied by a stepping up of the rates of relief. It is cogently argued that preference dividends, as well as debenture interest, should be a permissible deduction. Other points which have already become familiar are made. It is suggested that the whole apparatus of surtax direction should now be abandoned, with the possible exception of controlled investment companies.

The Association warns against double taxation where a company makes a capital gain, and the shareholders dispose of their shares at a profit which reflects that capital gain. It also advocates that where a company goes public, the valuation of the shares as at April 1965 should be on the basis of a public company, in order to compare like with like. Redemption gains on Government stocks should not be chargeable, and allowance should be made for the fall in the value of money.

Weekly Notes

COST ACCOUNTANTS' EXAMINATIONS

THERE were 6,250 candidates for the five parts of the December 1964 examinations of The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants, of whom 2,669 were successful. The prize winners in the various parts were:

First Place Part V and S. Laurence Gill Prize:
Mr D. A. May, Birmingham.
Lewton Coronation Prize for Advanced Accountancy and Financial Management (Part V):
Mr W. Davis, Hanworth.
Beyer Peacock Prize for Management Principles and Practice (Part V):
Mr D. G. Swingler, Cape Town.
First Place Part IV and Leverhulme Prize:
Mr G. K. Dickinson, Nottingham.
First Place Part III and Donald L. Moran Prize:
Mr K. L. Merritt, Erith.
W. B. Flowers Prize for Financial Accountancy (Part III):
Mr G. R. Mihell, Nairobi.
First Place Part II and George Russell Memorial Prize:
Mr E. B. Graves, Bristol.
First Place Part I and Roland Dunkerley Memorial Prize:
Mr G. T. J. Cummer, Bradford-on-Avon.

The names of those successful in Parts III–V of the examination, together with a full summary of the results, appear elsewhere in this issue.

FOTHERGALE CO LTD – IX

LAST Tuesday a panel of management lecturers and students discussed the Fothergale Co Ltd series on B.B.C.-2 with the author, Mr Ronald Brech.

The B.B.C. has claimed from the beginning that this 'Tuesday Term' programme was aimed at managers of small businesses and it would therefore have been preferable if the panel members had been more representative of practising business management. However, pertinent criticisms were offered and some of them echoed the doubts which have been expressed in these columns over the past weeks.

Most enlightened accountants will have noted with interest the developments which are taking place in the field of semi-scientific management techniques, but it is unfortunate that these newer methods are sometimes wishfully endowed with almost magical properties that their original advocates never claimed for them.

Since Mr Brech has so closely identified himself with Tom Rudyard, the central character in the dramatized episodes, he must be held responsible for the over-emphasis they have been given in this series. If the Fothergale exercise was to be treated seriously by workaday managers, then it had to have a sound practical basis – and this it never came near to achieving.

It would have sounded a lot more convincing if greater stress had been laid on the framework of financial and cost accounting that well-run businesses have come to know and respect – and it would have appeared more authentic if the qualified accountant's role had been given its proper due.

We understand the B.B.C. intends to run another Fothergale series so we must hope they will show greater resistance to Mr Brech's blandishments and concentrate on making it more plausible and a little nearer to business life as managers know it.

SCOTS LAW AND ESTATE DUTY

THE House of Lords on Wednesday of last week dismissed the estate duty appeal in Coats's Trustees v. Lord Advocate from the decision of the Court of Session (43 A.T.C. 164). The deceased Mr Coats made a marriage settlement in 1920 under which he had a life interest, followed by a life interest to his widow, reducible to one-half if she remarried and there were children of the first marriage. The wife divorced the settlor in 1931 on the ground of his adultery, whereupon, under Scots law, she became entitled at once to the full income. She remarried in 1932, the settlor died in 1958, and she died in 1959.

The Revenue claimed estate duty on the settlor's death on one-half of the settled fund, on the ground that a life interest in half of it arose in his favour on his former wife's remarriage in 1932. This claim was upheld unanimously in the Court of Session, and now the House of Lords, by a majority of three to two, according to The Financial Times of February 25th, has upheld that decision. The trustees of the settlement argued in vain that either the wife retained her full life interest when she remarried in 1932, or that she then retained one-half and the other half went to the children of the marriage. If either argument had prevailed, the £62,118 duty claimed would not have been payable. It is strange that the children should thus suffer because their mother remarried.

SETTLOR FAILS TO DIVEST HIMSELF

THE Court of Appeal on February 26th dismissed the taxpayer's appeal from the decision of Plowman, J., in Vandervell v. C.I.R. (43 A.T.C. 74), which was the subject of a Weekly Note in our issue of March 21st, 1964. Mr Vandervell gave some shares in his company to a charity, subject to an option in favour of a trust company to buy them from the charity at a low figure. After a dividend had been paid to the charity on the shares, the trust company exercised its option to acquire them. The trust company was trustee of a family settlement made by Mr Vandervell. He was assessed to surtax on the shares on the ground that he had not entirely divested himself of the shares so as to satisfy section 415 of the Income Tax Act, 1952. He argued in the Court of Appeal that the trust company must hold the shares on the trusts of the family settlement. The Court held, as reported in The Times of February 27th, that until the trusts on which the trust company was to hold the shares had been declared by Mr Vandervell, there was a resulting trust in his own favour. Accordingly, at the time the dividend was paid he was not absolutely excluded from ownership of the shares, and the dividends must be treated as his for surtax purposes.

AMALGAMATION AND STAMP DUTY

THE Court of Appeal has allowed the appeal of the Inland Revenue in a stamp duty case under section 55 of the Finance Act, 1927 (Central & District Properties Ltd v. C.I.R.) (The Times, February 27th). The company was buying out the shareholders in a company called Unicos and the consideration moving from it consisted, as to the necessary 90 per cent required by section 55, in shares of the company. However, under the scheme the vending shareholders of Unicos also received from an associate of the company what was in effect cash of 4*s* 3*d* per share. The Court held that this was 'consideration for the acquisition of the shares' by the appellant company, although not moving from the appellant company. Accordingly the requirements of section 55 were not satisfied and duty on the transfers was payable, in the sum of £109,098 7*s* 6*d*. Lord Justice Harman said that to accept the view that the offer by the associate company had been truly independent argued a degree of innocence to which he found himself quite unable to attain.

PURCHASE TAX ON STORAGE UNIT KITS

THE Court of Appeal has held that the word 'furniture' in the Purchase Tax Act, 1963 (Group 11 of the Second Schedule) includes:

> 'kits comprising component parts for assembling into backed storage units not exceeding 7 ft 6 in. in height' and known as 'Kewlox storage units' (Customs and Excise Commissioners v. H. G. Kewley Ltd; applying Betterways Panels v. Customs and Excise Commissioners [1964], 1 All E.R. 948). It also held that such furniture was 'of a kind used for domestic or office purposes' within the meaning of Group 11. Finally, the Court held that these storage units (i.e. the backed ones) did not fall within the exemption enacted in favour of:

> 'builders' hardware, sanitary ware and other articles of kinds ordinarily installed by builders as fixtures.'

Lord Justice Harman observed, according to The Times of February 24th, that the units were typical 'do it yourself' kits. The Commissioners conceded that tax did not attach to units more than 7 ft 6 in. high (presumably as being too large for domestic or office purposes) nor to units where no back was supplied.

RESTRAINT ON EMPLOYEE INVALID

THE former employee of a bookmaking firm has successfully challenged the validity of an undertaking by him that he would not for a period of three years next after the cessation of his employment carry on or be in any way directly or indirectly engaged or interested in the business of commission agents in the town of Cheltenham or at any place within twelve miles thereof. After he had been dismissed he obtained a bookmaker's permit and proposed to carry on the business of bookmaker and commission agent in Cheltenham. It was not contended that the employer had been justified in dismissing him.

Mr Justice Stamp said, as reported in The Times of February 27th, that he was unable to accept the company's submission that the relationship between a bookmaker's manager and the customers had any relevant similarity to that between a solicitor's managing clerk and the clients, as in Fitch v. Dewes ([1921], 2 A.C. 58). It was no part of the defendant's duty to advise customers what horse to back. He dismissed the employer's action and awarded the defendant £270 damages for wrongful dismissal. (S. W. Strange Ltd v. Mann.)

This is My Life . . .

by An Industrious Accountant

CHAPTER 266

THE managing director has long maintained the useful practice of holding weekly meetings of his top management team. They are informal and informative; their aim is to maximize the exchange of views and keep everyone fully briefed on new projects.

Last week he opened the discussion by musing in casual style on whither the company was going. What was our ultimate aim? What criteria had we adopted to test our progress towards the planned objective? Had we check points or interim assessments of any nature? He'd be interested to hear our individual views.

Admittedly our normal comments at previous meetings have run in a more materialistic and less philosophic vein, but that's not to say that we lack finer feelings. Not much of the earthy stuff about modern executives; under the surface we're dynamic 'dreamers, dreaming greatly in the man-stifled town'; some of us more so than others, naturally. We told him so, promptly enough.

The factory manager explained that superficially his job was to meet his target dates and his production quantities and specifications, but he had a wider perspective also. He wanted to expand into the five-acre site on the lower road and make two blades of grass grow where only one grew before, metaphorically speaking.

The sales manager pointed out that his ambition was to bring his trading profit to a peak which would justify taking over another store similar to ours in a nearby town and gradually becoming a power in the land. Horizontal and vertical expansion, plus a network of subsidiary affiliates, he said, with notable appreciation of his own technical phraseology. Between ourselves, he wouldn't know an affiliate from an aspidistra, if truth be told.

Observing that the M.D. didn't exclaim in ecstasy over these smug assurances, I tried to raise the conversation to a higher plane. Expansion wasn't everything, I told him; wealth was illusory in an inflationary spiral. After all, we were primarily the custodians of our trusting shareholders' investments. We must consolidate and secure, and hand back the ten talents entrusted to us with ten talents more as a proof of our efficiency and integrity. Ich dien was our motto.

Our chief ignored this sally and pondered over what he described as the company's public image. Our store filled an important place in the community, with our hundreds of employees and thousands of customers. Was our name esteemed and trusted locally? Was our staff considered lucky to work for such enlightened employers? Did people rely on invariably obtaining first-class value and reliable merchandise from our shelves? The factory manager stiffened slightly; he'd been involved recently in some little disagreement over clearing unlabelled 'seconds' in our January sales. Did we, continued the M.D., always appreciate our customers' needs and lean over backwards to help them? The sales manager went red; that lady who'd claimed that a musquash coat was already torn when delivered to her had had a rough passage.

Did we always pull together as a team and avoid petty squabbles over inessentials? At this question I remembered how I'd cracked down on the chief engineer's repairs budget request. True, he had as usual grossly inflated his reserve for unforeseen contingencies, but I'd scarcely been tactful. I glanced guiltily at the ill-used engineer and found that he was looking rather apologetically at me. Presumably, continued the remorseless indictment, our staff relationships were a subject of special care. No thoughtless lack of respect for human dignity; no over-drastic reprimands; no failure to understand a difficult or over-sensitive subordinate's idiosyncrasies. We all assured him hastily of our unfailing good practices in this respect though, of course, there just might have been unintentional lapses here and there in other departments.

Charity towards all, malice towards none, in this day and age, the director continued musingly. . . . As we filed out rather silently there was an odd feeling that what had been said would not be easily forgotten. Maybe our horizons had lifted as well as widened; maybe we needed a shot in the arm.

Guide to Company Balance Sheets and Profit and Loss Accounts

Sixth edition, by FRANK H. JONES, F.A.C.C.A., A.C.I.S., F.C.C.S. (W. Heffer & Sons Ltd, Cambridge. 63*s* net.)

A further edition of this entirely admirable textbook and reference work was, of course, a foregone conclusion, but it is nevertheless an event to be welcomed. The book discusses almost all aspects of published accounts, and even those who do not necessarily accept the author's initial views on the true purpose of depreciation or who will read with some surprise the statement that 'The assets (i.e. possessions) of the company are displayed on the right-hand side' will find that there is in fact (as emerges from the book) no narrowness of outlook. Depreciation is further discussed in a later chapter with immense common sense.

The book contains full discussions not only of the Companies Act but the Jenkins Report, the English Institute's recommendations on accounting principles, as well as statements issued by The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants.

There is an excellent section entitled 'Critical analysis of published accounts' and some very well chosen examples of good practice in published accounts; while all the original chapters have been expanded to cover recent legislation on trustee investments, share transfers and other relevant matters.

The previous edition was sold out within a few months and this new edition will doubtless similarly be much in demand.

Auditing: Principles and Procedure

Sixth edition, by ARTHUR W. HOLMES. (Richard D. Irwin, Inc., Homewood, Illinois. $9.50.)

Principles of Auditing

Third edition, by WALTER B. MEIGS, PH.D., C.P.A. (Richard D. Irwin, Inc., Homewood, Illinois. $9.)

These two publications have much in common apart from their subject. They come from the same publishing stable. They are written by professors of accounting and both are regular 'door-stoppers' of books running to nearly nine hundred pages. The second contains many practical examples and so might have assumed the title of the first. In the Library of Congress 'catalog', their card numbers are consecutive.

A lazy reviewer might thus think it enough to read only one of the offerings. The conscientious reviewer, adopting a rather different approach, reads neither. Instead, he stands back and gives each, in the currently fashionable phrase, a long, cool look. Then he dips into them, comparing texts and treatments, and weighs them up with his own absolute standards. Applying this method, both books can be thoroughly recommended. For the British reader, there are chapters on what might be called the 'politics of the profession' in America which, though interesting, are not wholly relevant but both authors – Professor Holmes a little more quickly than Professor Meigs – soon get down to fundamentals. Both are extremely sound on statistical sampling (sensibly basing their explanations on the understanding that an auditor is not necessarily a mathematical genius) and on management services; and Professor Meigs breaks new ground by considering the impact of electronic data processing on the work of both the internal and the external auditor.

Knowing that accountancy students in the United Kingdom are already heavily loaded with reading matter, one hesitates to add to the list but either of these books would grace any addendum for further study. Practitioners also, who feel that their auditing instincts are becoming dulled through repetitive work on the records of the same clients year after year, will find the case studies appended to the texts of both works refreshing in construction and presentation.

Cost Accounting: a Managerial Approach

by MORTON BACKER, PH.D., C.P.A., and LYLE E. JACOBSEN, PH.D., C.P.A. (McGraw-Hill Publishing Co Ltd, Maidenhead. 76*s* net.)

This substantial book, written by two professors of accounting as a way of instilling an understanding of the nature and management use of cost data, is made up of four basic parts – an introduction dealing with cost concepts, followed by sections dealing with the development of cost systems (standard costing, variances and so on), the use of costs in performance evaluation and profit planning, and the use of costs in management decision making.

Perhaps the most important virtue of this work is the way it shows the true relationship between traditional cost studies and what has become known as management accounting. We have become aware that there need no longer be any conflict between the work of different groups or classes of accountants, all of whom need to use fully those benefits which stem from the use of modern accounting techniques and to justify the detailed work of cost accountants, in whatever form of reporting is required.

The book is almost as readily assimilable by English-speaking students generally as by those in the U.S.A., and its illustrations are excellent. In the chapter on investment decisions there is reference to opportunity costs, and to 'cut-off rate' in evaluating capital investments, but these terms are now understood in Britain and elsewhere. In the same chapter the various methods of estimating pay-back are dealt with by example as well as description. There is also a most valuable discussion of distribution cost analysis which would be even better had 'total distribution costs' concepts been dealt with in addition. Ample interest tables and a good index complete the book.

This is a book which will assist students to think more widely, and practitioners and commercial accountants to see their own problems more clearly, and may well lead their thoughts to the right solutions.

Personnel Management and Industrial Relations

Fifth Edition, by DALE YODER, PH.D. (Sir Isaac Pitman & Sons Ltd, London. 55*s* net.)

This is the fifth edition of a book which originally appeared in the United States of America in 1938 and in Great Britain in 1958. In this edition much has been revised including the sequence of some of the chapters. Written primarily for students of labour relations it is none the less of immense interest to management trainees.

Starting with a review of the field covered and indicating where responsibility lies, there follow a series of chapters dealing with the history of industrial development to the factory system and current trends in relationships; after a further four chapters on manpower management theories, the author examines in turn the places of management, the unions and the public in administering labour; distinctions between staff and labour; manpower training and incentives schemes; and communications between management and labour.

The final chapters cover what the author calls 'insight perspective and evaluation' and proposes an 'industrial relations audit'. Lastly, there is a useful short section on careers opportunities in this field.

In the U.S.A. considerable attention is paid to the subject of management-labour relations. This is just the book to prove to anyone tempted to doubt it that it is an equally important subject in Britain and elsewhere. Many traditional attitudes to the problem are prejudiced by lack of skill or understanding of the subject, or of how wasteful it can be to ignore opportunities to improve these relationships whenever possible. For the student of practical, as well as theoretic, management, Dr Yoder's is a most valuable book.

The Hospitals Year Book 1965

Editor: J. F. MILNE M.C., B.SC. (The Institute of Hospital Administrators, London. 73*s* 6*d* (by post 77*s*).)

The new edition of this excellent work of reference has again undergone a thorough revision planned to ensure up-to-date and authoritative information for all branches of administration and management in the hospital and allied services. The hospital directory sections set out full particulars of hospitals and hospital authorities, while other sections give details of bed and patient statistics, hospital finance, local health authorities, executive councils, the National Health Service Whitley Councils, and hospital contributory and provident schemes. The substantial reference section includes notes for hospital administrators on legal, technical and general subjects.

In his review of the hospital service during the past year, the editor discusses the revisions of the ten-year plans for hospital building. The 1964 revisions, he says, show many changes from the original plans. They provide for further additional maternity accommodation and some new schemes are also included, but as against this many projects for new hospitals and major redevelopment schemes which were included in the original plans have been either postponed or eliminated altogether.

The official explanation that these changes are due to the reassessment of priorities, and to the reconsideration of the scope of particular schemes, can, Mr Milne states, only be partially accepted. The conclusion that inevitably emerges, he says, is that the estimates of building costs used in drawing up the original plans have proved to have been far too low, and the building programme consequently has had to be slowed down, giving rise to disappointment and frustration in the service. Another adverse effect, he adds, must be an expensive continuance of the wasteful use of resources in patching up obsolescent buildings, and a prolongation of the endeavour to practise twentieth-century medicine in nineteenth-century hospitals.

Dispensation

THE directors of Westland Aircraft Ltd have received special dispensation from the Stock Exchange relieving the company of providing half-year profit figures. In his statement with the company's 1963–64 accounts, which provide this week's reprint, Sir Eric Mensforth, the chairman, explains why.

The directors, he says, have studied the figures at the half-yearly stage for the past few years and have found that they have fluctuated very widely. This arises because price settlements are only reached intermittently and because private venture expenditure may be at risk at the end of a half-year and, therefore, written off, but covered by contracts at the year end, thus converting an expense into an asset for the purpose of the annual accounts.

The fluctuations thus created are sometimes extreme and would mislead shareholders because their effect on the year's results could not be forecast at the time of making a half-yearly statement. In fact, it is stated, the company operates in a field where the normal profit cycle covers several years and for that reason the results of a period of less than twelve months are of no value in assessing the company's prosperity.

No Figures

In the light of these factors, the Stock Exchange has agreed with the directors' proposal that so long as these circumstances apply – and there is no foreseeable situation when they are unlikely to apply, it must be admitted – the company will circulate to shareholders a half-yearly review of its activities which will not include figures. The statement will, however, contain a progress report and will state any special circumstances which may have arisen.

Complying with the Stock Exchange's request for turnover figures, the Westland Aircraft accounts this year show the sales invoiced. The chairman makes the point that the figure does not necessarily represent deliveries achieved during the year. The work undertaken by the company is almost entirely in the aeronautical and allied fields where experience has shown that an annual analysis of the results of the company's activities would not help shareholders to assess the company's position.

The only sizeable business, the separate result of which can be readily measured year by year, is that carried on by Westland Engineers. This contributed about 10 per cent of the group's profits for 1963–64.

Ten-year View

Taking the chairman's explanation of the half-year figure and sales positions into account, the longer term look at the company's position obviously becomes important. The financial record included in the annual report – and in the reprint – is therefore an essential part of the company's reporting.

It is interesting to see from the ten-year record that over that period the ratio of pre-tax profits to sales invoiced has not varied to any great degree. Where there is a difference is in the ratio of sales invoiced and pre-tax profits to capital employed, the latter item reflecting the heavy investment involved in aircraft development and particularly in the helicopter and hovercraft spheres in which Westland concentrates.

At that point it may be noted that as the result of lengthy negotiations with the Inland Revenue on the tax treatment of development expenditure written off in earlier years and the agreement of tax liabilities generally, a sum of £500,000 of tax provisions no

Memoranda submitted to the Chancellor of the Exchequer on the Proposed Corporation Tax and Capital Gains Tax

In addition to the pre-Budget representations submitted last month to the Chancellor of the Exchequer by the Council of The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants (extracts from which appeared in The Accountant of February 20th), the Council of the Association has now submitted further memoranda on the proposed corporation tax and capital gains tax which are reproduced below.

CORPORATION TAX

For some years the Association has advocated the adoption of a system which would impose upon companies only one impost in respect of profits earned. In this sense the Association may be said to have been an advocate of a system of corporation tax, but it has been very conscious of the need for such a system to be adapted to the particular needs of the United Kingdom tax structure and it is evident that the outlined proposals put forward fall short of this essential criterion to a very marked degree. The Association has been foremost in advocating simplification, but takes the view that far from simplifying the position, the present proposals are likely to result in considerable complication.

In particular, the Council regards it as a retrograde step to divorce the taxation of the shareholder from that of the company.

While some other countries do have a corporation tax, in some cases the corporation tax is lower on the distributed profits and in others, when the dividend is taxed in the hands of the shareholders, there are various relieving provisions – e.g. quotient familiale in France and the split income principle in America – and it is fair to say that one cannot consider corporation tax in isolation.

In addition, you have indicated that it is your intention to discourage distributions, but the Council can only consider that far from being a step forward, such a tax is a retrograde step. There is insufficient evidence to indicate that companies which retain a higher proportion of their profits necessarily invest them better than the individual shareholder who receives those profits in the form of distributions. Indeed, a system which favours retentions can protect inefficient organizations and inhibit the free flow of capital to those projects where it can be most efficiently used. The Council strongly advocates the development of a system of taxation which would result in companies being subjected to only one charge in respect of their profits but considers the present proposals to be most undesirable. In particular, the Council wishes to draw your attention to the following points:

(1) Duplication of taxation of income and dividends

The Council considers that all dividends from one United Kingdom company to another United Kingdom company be treated as franked for corporation tax purposes in the hands of the recipient and any necessary repayments made. As between parent and subsidiary companies, payments should be made gross without deduction of any withholding tax.

(2) United Kingdom companies operating abroad

Companies operating abroad whose income is almost entirely earned abroad will suffer to a greater extent from the proposed new tax legislation than those companies which operate entirely in the United Kingdom.

In the case of a company trading entirely in the United Kingdom, the amount of profit available for shareholders and retentions will be the net profit after charging corporation tax. On the other hand, companies operating abroad will suffer a further deduction of tax before arriving at the amount available for distribution and retention to the extent that the effective rate of foreign tax exceeds the rate of corporation tax.

The activities of United Kingdom companies whose operations are carried on in foreign countries are equally important to the United Kingdom with regard to the balance of payments as are the activities of companies directly engaged in exporting from the United Kingdom, and are often carried on in countries to which exports are subject to some form of restriction.

The Council recommends that relief for the excess of foreign tax over the amount available for credit against corporation tax be allowed against the income tax deducted from dividends paid.

(3) Investment allowances

The present system of investment allowances provides a powerful incentive to install technologically advanced and efficient capital equipment. The Government wishes to continue this encouragement, but under a corporation tax the cash value of the allowances is diminished. The Council considers that one method of maintaining the encouragement above referred to would be to increase the rate of investment allowance.

(4) Preference dividends

The Council considers that for practical purposes there is no good fiscal reason for treating fixed preference dividends in a different way from prior charges. It is generally a matter of historical accident that preference shares rather than unsecured loan stock or debentures were issued. Such preference dividends are at present a net cost to a company, but in future will be a gross cost. This is an anomaly which arises out of the organization of a company's capital structure and not out of any fiscal principle, and this situation should be avoided by fixed preference dividends being permitted deductions in the computation of a company's profit for the purposes of corporation tax.

(5) Cessation adjustment

The present commencement and cessation provisions seem likely to end on the introduction of a corporation tax. Upon this assumption, so far as companies trading before the introduction of the tax are concerned, they are liable to pay tax on basis periods in excess of the life of the company as a result. The Council considers that some provision is necessary to eliminate this anomaly.

(6) Losses
Under the present system of loss relief granted by section 341 of the Income Tax Act, 1952, a company obtains relief in the year in which it incurs a loss against an assessment based on the previous year's profit. The Council considers that tax should be suffered only on the total profits earned, taking one year with another, and that losses should be available to be carried forward or spread back at the option of the taxpayer.

(7) Past Losses
The Council considers that provision should be made for dealing with tax losses and unrelieved capital allowances brought forward. Presumably if there are, say, profits tax losses brought forward and no income tax losses, some formula should be devised to calculate the appropriate relief available.

(8) Dividends paid out of past profits which have been subject to income tax
The Council considers that where dividends are paid after April 1966 out of pre-existing taxed reserves, there should be some measure of relief with regard to the accounting to the Inland Revenue for tax deducted from any such dividends. Otherwise, pre-existing taxed reserves will be subject to duplication of charge. The Council recommends that after the introduction of corporation tax, dividends should be deemed to be paid out of profits subjected to that tax to the extent that such profits are available, and that any excess should be deemed to be paid out of taxed reserves, and that tax deducted from dividends paid out of taxed reserves should be retained by the company.

(9) Private companies
For some years there has been no good reason for maintaining the limits on directors' remuneration in controlled companies, and the Council considers that with the introduction of corporation tax these limits should be abolished.

(10) Basis of assessment
On the assumption that there will be only one assessment covering all assessable income for the purposes of corporation tax, the Council considers that provision will need to be made during the transitional period to avoid duplication of charge in respect of any element of income.

(11) Deeds of covenant
Many companies are committed to payments under deeds of covenant in favour of universities, business schools and charities. These obligations were entered into in good faith in circumstances which enable the company to make a higher payment than it might be able to afford under the proposed new tax structure. The Council recommends that for the future such covenanted payments should be deductible for corporation tax.

(12) Management expenses
It is not clear that under the proposed corporation tax rules there will be any machinery for relief in respect of management expenses to those companies who at present qualify therefor under section 425 of the Income Tax Act, 1952. Based on its recommendation in paragraph (1) above, that income which has already been subject to corporation tax should be franked as regards a recipient company, the Council recommends that a claim for relief should be available against corporation tax to which the underlying profits of the companies paying the dividends received by the investment company have been subject. The Council considers that the net result of the provisions should be to charge all companies on a comparable basis.

(13) Non-resident shareholders of United Kingdom companies
The Council views with concern the possible effect on investment in the United Kingdom by persons resident abroad. If the profits of United Kingdom companies are subject to corporation tax and the dividends received by non-resident shareholders subject to income tax at the full standard rate, this will be considered by non-resident shareholders as equivalent to a withholding tax of 41·25 per cent compared with 10 per cent or 15 per cent more usual in the case of other countries. The Council recommends that the tax deducted from dividends paid to non-resident shareholders should be at a fixed rate not exceeding that recommended by the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development in its report (draft double taxation convention on income and capital – Report of the O.E.C.D. Fiscal Committee, 1963 – paragraph 2, article 10).

(14) Double United Kingdom taxation on foreign dividends
The Council wishes to draw attention to the fact that double taxation would arise in respect of some foreign dividends received by United Kingdom residents unless the existing provisions of section 201 of the Income Tax Act, 1952, were applied mutatis mutandis to provide relief from double United Kingdom tax on the 'appropriate fraction' of foreign dividends.

(15) Grouping and subvention payments
The Council recommends that both the existing grouping treatment and the system of subvention payments should continue.

(16) Surtax directions
You have indicated your desire to encourage retention and in this context the Council considers that there can be no good reason to continue the surtax direction mechanism when a corporation tax is introduced.

(17) Overseas trade corporations
The Council feels that there is no further need to emphasize the importance of overseas trade and it therefore suggests:

(i) that overseas trade corporation trading income be exempted from corporation tax;
(ii) that United Kingdom tax on dividends paid by overseas trade corporations be continued on the present basis;
(iii) that non-resident shareholders in overseas trade corporations should continue to be exempt from United Kingdom taxation.

CAPITAL GAINS TAX

The Council of the Association takes the view that whenever taxation of any kind is imposed which is:

(a) unjust in its relative incidence upon persons with the same capacity to pay;

(b) directed at some classes of persons and not others;

(c) especially restrictive against personal initiative and personal endeavour;

(d) such that the liability cannot be quantified both reasonably accurately and reasonably soon after the event occurring which gave rise to the tax;

(e) such that anomalies are created;

(f) the cause of tax being suffered more than once, then the subject may well be expected to complain.

In the view of the Council, your outline proposals suggest that the new tax will fall short of what is desirable in all these respects, as will be shown in detail in this memorandum.

In the Council's view there will never be general acceptance that all capital gains are properly taxable unless the changing provisions are such that there are no injustices and no anomalies. If there is no proper tax, the Council fears that tax evasion will become rife and this cannot but be harmful to this country's social structure and moral strength.

(1) Valuation

In many cases the tax is to be levied on the increase in value of assets after April 1965. For assets held then a value will have to be arrived at before any tax liability can be computed; except where the assets are sold for cash, a value will again have to be arrived at when the assets are exchanged, leased, forfeited, given away, or when they pass on death. The following points will need to be clarified:

(a) Is a valuation of all assets at April 1965 to be obligatory within a certain period? How is this, in practical terms, to be done, bearing in mind that it can now take years to agree values upon a death?

(b) If such a valuation is not to be obligatory within a certain period, how are values as at April 1965 to be agreed with the Inland Revenue in perhaps forty years' time? How, for example, would one now set about valuing a piece of land or a picture or some unquoted shares as at April 1925?

(c) What is to be the basis of valuation of unquoted shares in a controlled company? If there should be some change in the position as concerns control or benefit between two valuation dates, an 'income basis' might be proper at one date and an 'assets basis' at another. The difference could be assessed as a capital gain whereas there would be, in truth, no gain but merely a change in basis of valuation.

(d) The value of shares in a company will be increased by retention of profit from distribution. The whole of such profit may have suffered surtax following directions under section 245, Income Tax Act, 1952, or the equivalent corporation tax provisions. The capital gain will have to exclude such profit as has suffered surtax since April 1965 but which has not been distributed. Such relieving provisions must be complicated and could involve research back over a great number of years, and the Council questions whether the proper way to avoid this situation is not to sweep away the section 245 provisions in the knowledge that a capital gains tax will, in any event and at some point of time, tax the accretion in value due to the ploughing back of profit.

(e) Similarly, where income has been taxed under the provisions of section 412, Income Tax Act, 1952, but has not been actually distributed, the value of the foreign assets will have to be reduced by the amount of that income.

(2) Computation

(a) Any increase in the value of an asset must, over a period of monetary inflation, include an inflationary element. If a tax is levied on the arithmetical gain, the tax ceases to be, in part, a tax on capital gains and becomes a capital expropriation. There should accordingly be a reduction of the arithmetical gain by a factor derived from the variation in the Board of Trade cost of living index over the period during which the chargeable gain was accruing.

(b) There is, in truth, no capital gain realized if the proceeds of a sale of an asset are re-invested. Why is there to be discrimination between he who keeps his portfolio intact and he who switches his investments? Neither, simply by his course of action, makes a greater gain than the other, but one will suffer tax and the other not; furthermore, the investor who re-invests at the top of the market will pay tax on a gain which is not sustained and can only carry forward his subsequent loss. Where, upon a sale, the proceeds are fully re-invested, the taxpayer should have the option (similar to the option available to him for income tax purposes where there is a balancing charge on the sale of plant which is replaced) of electing that there is no chargeable gain, and that the new asset should be deemed to have cost the same as the asset which it replaced.

(3) Losses

(a) A loss is to be carried forward unless there is some gain in the same year against which it can be set. Many people may have only a few chargeable assets. If the last one is realized at a loss, it should be possible to set this loss backward against past capital gains. A loss on valuation at death should be able to be set backward against profits realized in the lifetime, as too should losses which come to be incurred by a company upon its liquidation.

(b) The Council regrets to note that while taxing gains on the disposal of chattels (where the disposal price or value is £1,000 or more), you intend to restrict the relief for losses on chattels. This seems to be a 'heads I win – tails you lose' attitude which is misplaced in a taxing statute.

(c) You have said that where assets are acquired before April 1965, relief will be given only for the due proportion of the loss which accrued after that day. Does the word 'due' as here used mean the ultimate loss on realization by reference to an April 1965 valuation or a time proportion of a total loss between acquisition and realization?

(4) Chargeable assets

(a) The Council acknowledges that there is political expediency and administrative convenience in exempting from tax gains on certain kinds of assets (private residences, insurance policies, national savings certificates, etc.), and in providing limits up to which the tax will not apply (a chattel sold for under £1,000, or up to £5,000 of gains upon a death) but regrets, (i) the tendency which this will create of directing investment into certain fields although other fields might be more beneficial to the social and economic structure of the country; and, (ii) the injustice which will be caused by the stated limits unless there are satisfactory marginal relief provisions.

(b) The Council considers that where there is any gain arising upon a reorganization of the framework of a business organization or a group, such gain should not be charged to tax if the gain remains within the organization or group.

(c) Transfers of assets within a group of companies should not be treated as giving rise to a chargeable gain.

(5) Chargeable persons

(a) The giving away of an asset will be treated as a realization of that asset. Who is to pay the tax on the gain up to the date of the gift? How is it to be paid where the gift is not readily realizable? If the donor has given away (or settled) all his possessions, is the capital gains tax to become a charge on those possessions? If, when a gift does come to be realized, it realizes less than the value placed upon it at the time of the gift, is the tax payable to be reduced accordingly?

The Council suggests that the procedure in the Finance Act, 1962, should be followed, whereby a donee can stand in the donor's shoes, and that there should be no assessable gain until the asset is realized.

(b) Upon a death the capital gain accrued up to then will be payable by the estate. As a consequence, the residuary legatee will bear all the tax (albeit reduced by an estate duty thereon) even though the greater part of the chargeable assets may go to specific legatees. Surely, if anyone at all makes a capital gain upon a death, it is the legatee who receives an asset for nothing. The Council considers that the capital gains tax chargeable on assets upon a death should be paid by the persons receiving the assets.

(c) Where assets are given away or bequeathed to a charity or to some other person or body exempt from capital gains tax, the Council considers that no tax should be chargeable in respect of the gain on those assets.

(d) The Council assumes that where a person resident in the United Kingdom is liable for income tax on a remittance basis (because of his being not ordinarily resident in, or not domiciled in, the United Kingdom), he will be liable to capital gains tax only if the gain is brought into the United Kingdom.

(e) Where a resident is liable to tax on a gain made abroad but is unable, because of Governmental restrictions overseas, to remit the gain to the United Kingdom, the Council assumes that he will be eligible for relief on the lines of section 21, Finance Act, 1953.

(6) Relief for foreign taxation

The Council assumes that relief will be granted in arriving at the capital gains tax payable for any tax (by whatsoever name called) suffered overseas on the same capital gain.

(7) Avoidance of duplication of taxation

(a) The Council assumes that there will be provisions to ensure that a capital gain, once it has been taxed, will be identifiable as a taxed gain thereafter, and that successive movements of such a taxed gain through a group of companies or from a company to its shareholders will not on each occasion be regarded as a new capital gain to be taxed afresh.

(b) Where a company has made a substantial capital gain (so paying the capital gains tax thereon), the value of its share capital (quoted or unquoted) may also rise substantially. The Council assumes that upon a sale of those shares by a shareholder, or upon a valuation of them (on death or on the occasion of a gift) there will be provisions to reduce the value by the amount of the underlying gain already taxed. Upon a liquidation of a company, the distribution equivalent to taxed capital gains should not again be taxed in the hand of a shareholder as a further capital gain by him.

(8) Miscellaneous points

(a) The nature of some assets is such that it is expensive to value them. Many will have to be valued twice or more at successive dates. Is there to be an allowance for the cost of valuations in arriving at the assessable capital gain?

(b) You have said that where securities are realized involuntarily, so that new securities are held in place of the old as a result of a conversion operation or a scheme of company reorganization, the new securities can be regarded as the same as the old ones and there will be deemed to have been no realization. Is a compulsory transfer under sections 208 or 209, Companies Act, to be so treated?

(c) The Council would regard it as regrettable if a capital gain which had matured over a long period were to be taxed at the same rate as a gain which was achieved in a short period. It is suggested that the rate of tax chargeable should be progressively reduced according to the length of time the asset was held. Having regard to the nation's need for development and so as not to militate against incentive to initiative, it is submitted that this could best be served:

(i) by exempting from the tax gains which are re-invested (as already referred to above);

(ii) by there being a progressive reduction in the basic rate of tax for each year up to twenty years for which the assets were held, in the intent that any gain which was not realized until after twenty years should be free of tax and that the tax rate should be halved on any gain not realized until ten years.

(d) You have said that the relationship of the new tax to the existing short-term gains tax is under consideration. The yield from the existing short-term gains tax has been negligible and is not likely to increase unless the rate of the new tax is comparably high. The Council submits that in the interests of simplicity and administrative convenience the short-term gains tax be repealed with effect from April 1965 and that, if it is thought proper that a gain realized within six months (or three years in the case of land) be taxed at a higher rate, this can be done equally well within the framework of the new tax.

Taxation of Benefits

SIR, – Reading the excellent article by Mr H. S. A. Macnair in your issue of February 20th, set me thinking about some aspects of 'benefits' which are seldom referred to, and which might well bear examination by auditors.

We are all somewhat obsessed by the taxation aspect to the exclusion of other considerations. But thought is seldom spared for the shareholder whose funds are used to provide the benefits. The scrutiny given to the matter by the Inland Revenue is satisfied when the non-allowable portion of 'benefits' is taxed as additional remuneration, and there in the majority of cases the matter ends.

If, however, a portion of the benefit does not pass the test as expenditure properly incurred in furthering the business of the employer, should we not examine the correctness of the charge against the company's profits? It would no doubt be argued on behalf of the director concerned that these non-allowable benefits formed part of his remuneration and that he was allowed to have the advantage in recognition of services rendered, and that provided such amounts are included in the published accounts as part of the total remuneration paid to directors the law is satisfied. I am of the opinion, however, that if this portion of the remuneration were to be shown separately there would be some fairly searching questions put at annual general meetings.

Another matter which has created inequity is the choice of the arbitrary limit of £2,000. It is now well known that some companies arrange for relatively junior employees earning much less than this to be responsible for 'entertaining' and whose expenditure does not therefore incur the same investigation. One could quote other examples of devices used to circumvent the strict letter of the law, and it would be interesting to hear the views of readers as to how far the duty of auditors should be carried in this context.

Yours faithfully,

Maidstone. R. W. SMITH, F.C.A.

Dividend v. Capital Distribution

SIR, – A recent declaration of dividend by a public company has given rise to discussion and I would be interested to have your readers' comments.

A public company declared a final dividend of xd per share net of tax at 7*s* 9*d* in the £, and shareholders were given the option of taking instead a capital distribution of xd per share.

It is assumed that in order to satisfy the Companies Act, 1948, section 157, shareholders were circulated requesting the completion of a form, only if they wished to receive the capital distribution in lieu of the dividend. Non-receipt of the form by the company would be deemed a desire to receive the dividend. This information would enable the directors to recommend such dividend or distribution to shareholders in general meeting. The resolution was passed as a special resolution in general meeting.

One presumes that when shares of this class (ordinary) were issued and a quotation granted, that shareholders must be treated on equal footing and it would be very unusual for the articles of association or the terms of issue to state otherwise.

The question that arises with such a declaration is simply, 'Are the shareholders of that class being treated equally?'

Firstly, a dividend is a gross dividend from which tax at the standard rate is deducted and by law the necessary information must be shown on all dividend warrants issued.

Secondly, by circulating shareholders it is not practicable to obtain the wishes of all shareholders for a variety of reasons as any registrar knows. On very vital matters the shareholders' response at very best will only yield in numbers a 50–60 per cent return, and many will put the figure as low as under 40 per cent.

It is conceded that such a class of shareholders can receive a dividend and a capital distribution but when a mixed payment is made as above it is only the net payment by the company that bears comparison.

If one were to assume that approval in general meeting made such a payment valid, what would be the position of such a recommendation as an interim dividend?

Yours faithfully,

South Heath, E. WOODWARD.
Great Missenden.

Overseas Company Tax Rates

SIR, – I have recently seen the issue of The Accountant dated January 2nd. For the benefit of those of your readers who may be interested and – I hesitate to add – for the enlightenment of the Statistics and Intelligence Division of the Board of Inland Revenue, I would like to point out some inaccuracies in the tabulation of overseas company tax rates reproduced on pages 11–13 (inclusive), so far as the following West Indian territories are concerned:

Barbados:
Whilst it is correct that a trade tax is levied upon trading companies (for the benefit of the local council(s) in whose rating area(s) the chargeable profits are deemed to arise), in addition to the 40 per cent corporate income tax, the rate given in the 'Notes' column of the tabulation – even though an 'indication' – is rather out of date! In fact, the rate of 18·5 per cent was only effective for the (trade tax) year of assessment 1961–62, commencing April 1st, 1961. It was raised to its present level of 19·5 per cent by section 2 of the Local Government (Amendment) (No. 2) Act, 1962 (No. 37 of 1962), which came into operation on April 1st, 1962, and also introduced a significant change in the basis of assessment for trade tax purposes effective from the year of assessment 1962–63.

Although it is appreciated that tabulations of this nature must necessarily be limited to the bare essentials of their subject-matter there is, unfortunately, a tendency towards over-simplification which can so easily lead to omissions sufficiently material to create misleading impressions and even misgivings as to the reliability of the entire exercise. For instance, in the case of the trade tax, it is not evident from the scant information given that, at the present time –

(a) there is a fundamental difference in the basis of assessment from that adopted for corporate income tax purposes;

(b) the trade tax actually paid in the basis period for any (income tax) year of assessment is unilaterally relieved in the corporate income tax assessment for that year, and – arising out of a combination of these two factors;

(c) a company's overall 'effective rate' of tax can vary considerably from the apparent aggregate rate of 59·5 per cent.

This will perhaps become clearer when it is explained that the present basis of assessment for corporate income tax purposes is (normally) the profit of the accounting period ending within the calendar year preceding the year of assessment, subject to adjustments – similar to those required in the United Kingdom – in respect of disallowable expenses and the displacement of book depreciation by initial, annual and (since the year of assessment 1960) investment allowances; on the other hand, since April 1st, 1962, the basis of assessment for trade tax purposes has been the average of the profits – as adjusted for income tax and after deduction of the appropriate capital allowances and of the aggregate rateable values of all properties used for the purposes of the trade – for the five accounting periods commencing on or after January 1st, 1959, and ending in the year preceding the (trade tax) year of assessment, or for such shorter period as the trade may have been carried on since January 1st, 1959; for any accounting period in respect of which there is an adjusted tax loss (after the deduction of capital allowances and rateable values) the 'profit' is taken as nil for the purpose of the average profit calculation.

British Guiana:

It is considered misleading to show the 'standard' rate of tax charged on the income of companies in this case as 55 per cent when, in fact, it is 45 per cent. The 10 per cent National Development Savings Levy, although complementary to the income tax – in the sense that it was assessed upon the chargeable income as determined for income tax assessment purposes (i.e. after all adjustments and the displacement of book depreciation by wear and tear allowances), was introduced with effect from July 1st, 1962, as an additional imposition – not by amendment of the existing income tax legislation, but by a separate and distinct ordinance – the National Development Savings Levy Ordinance, 1962 (No. 16 of 1962).

In these circumstances, it would seem to be clearer and less confusing if the N.D.S.L. had been accorded the same treatment as the Barbados trade tax and handled entirely in the 'Notes' column of the tabulation. This would also seem to be preferable in view of the fact that, in January 1964, the British Guiana Supreme Court declared the Levy Ordinance unconstitutional and thus void and of no effect and, even more recently – following the change of Government – an appeal to the Privy Council was withdrawn and the levy collected (sic) illegally in respect of the six months ended December 31st, 1962, and the year ended December 31st, 1963, is to be repaid in the near future.

St Lucia:

The rate of company tax was increased from 33.33 per cent to 40 per cent with effect from the year of assessment 1964 – commencing January 1st, 1964 – by section 4 of the Income Tax (Amendment) Ordinance, 1964 (No. 7 of 1964).

SIR, – I wish to congratulate you on the publication in your January 2nd issue of the 'Overseas Company Tax Rates'. This publication is of immense interest to all of us living and practising accounting abroad, and I hope it will be repeated on a yearly basis.

I would like to take this opportunity, however, to point out that listed under the current tax rate on profits in Brazil, you state in a note that there is a compulsory loan of 15 per cent of the tax. This compulsory loan was extinguished as from January 1st, 1965.

Yours faithfully,

SIR, – Having recently seen your comments of the above B.B.C.-2 series, I must say I am incensed at the narrowness of your reactionary views. The sooner fuddy-duddy accountants are relegated to their true tasks and modern economist/statisticians of the Tom Rudyard type take control of the management of industrial companies the better for the United Kingdom's economy and balance of payments.

Yours faithfully,

DINNER AT SWANSEA

South Wales and Monmouthshire Society of Chartered Accountants

Accountants were not 'crystal gazers' and so were finding it difficult to answer questions from clients seeking information on the Government's proposals to make changes in taxation arrangements, particularly relating to companies, said Mr W. Guy Densem, F.C.A., President of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, in Swansea on Thursday of last week. Mr Densem was attending the annual dinner of the South Wales and Monmouthshire Society of Chartered Accountants at the Brangwyn Hall.

Referring to the proposals to make 'somewhat drastic changes' in the taxation arrangements in relation to companies, he said:

> 'While one understands the difficulties of the Government and the Civil Service in putting out details of what is really intended, I do hope that clients will really understand that the profession is in a very difficult situation. We are not crystal gazers and we are being asked all sorts of questions at the moment that we find extremely difficult to answer because we just do not know what is intended. While it is a pity that we are placed in such a position, it is no good grumbling about that sort of thing.'

The Institute was trying to assist its members who felt they should have a greater knowledge by offering courses. Mr Densem referred to a recent questionnaire sent to members and appealed for a general response. The Institute wanted to do its best for its members, he said. It wanted to help them to keep up to date. It must be prepared to endeavour to organize courses on other subjects other than electronic data processing, but they had to know whether or not they were going to have any support.

He said he could not leave Swansea without expressing a debt of gratitude to the local education authority. The Institute was endeavouring to help its articled clerks in all possible ways, particularly by getting courses where tutorial and oral instruction was given in support of correspondence courses.

> 'I have never found', he said, 'a centre where so much is done ungrudgingly and willingly by the local education authority as in Swansea, which gives the greatest co-operation.'

Mr Densem was replying to a toast to the Institute proposed by the Mayor of Swansea, Councillor A. Willis Pile, J.P., F.C.I.S., who is a shipbroker.

The Mayor told the 400 guests that if they were to

The President of the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, Mr W. Guy Densem, F.C.A., signing the Visitors' Book when he was received in the Guildhall, Swansea, by the Mayor on Thursday of last week. With him in the picture (left to right) are: Mr Howard N. Jones, B.A., A.C.A., Hon. Secretary, South Wales and Monmouthshire Society of Chartered Accountants; Mr G. S. Pollard, A.S.A.A., F.I.M.T.A., Borough Treasurer of Swansea; Mr C. Evan-Jones, M.B.E., Secretary of the Institute; Mr J. C. Montgomery Williams, F.C.A., Member of the Council of the Institute; The Mayor of Swansea; Mr H. have the full benefit of their professional associations, they should be loyal to them and to each other. They must see to it that the associations served the purpose of the people.

'We are facing difficult days, but if we face them in the spirit of loyalty to one another, people will find that their fears have been quite needless.'

He congratulated the Society's President, Mr H. Wilson Thomas, F.C.A., who presided, and recalled that Mr Thomas's father, the late Mr A. E. Thomas, had been President of the Society from 1939–46, and who, he said, he was sure would have been proud to see his son holding the position he himself held for many years.

The toast of 'Our Guests' was proposed by Mr Wilson Thomas, who thanked members for their support. Mr E. Rhodri Harries, Clerk to the Justices for the Hundred of Swansea, responded.

Mr T. H. Trump, F.C.A., Vice-President of the Society, proposing a toast to the Society's President, said Mr Thomas had always shown the keenest interest in the affairs of the Society affecting seniors and also students. Now, in his year as President, he represented the chartered accountants of a very large area of Wales and Monmouthshire.

'I understand the Chancellor of the Exchequer has not yet asked his advice on taxation matters – but as far as I can see he hasn't asked anybody else either', said Mr Trump, amid general laughter and applause.

Scottish Chartered Accountants' Dinner in Birmingham

Over two hundred members and guests attended the sixth biennial dinner of The Association of Scottish Chartered Accountants in the Midlands, at the Grand Hotel, Birmingham, on February 26th.

Proposing the toast of 'The City of Birmingham', Sir Eric Clayson, F.C.A., chairman of The Birmingham Post and Mail Ltd, said that while he appreciated the fact that he was attending a Scottish Association's dinner he could not help noticing a surprising number of English accountants present.

Sir Eric went on to say that Birmingham was a friendly place once the 'Brummie' realizes that the stranger has come to work, and not to compromise him, and the skill and ability of 'our friends from over the border is valued immensely'.

Local Government under Scrutiny

Replying, Alderman D. Johnstone, J.P., Deputy Mayor of Birmingham, said that a lot of the city's success in so many fields had been due to the people who had come from outside its boundaries. Local government, he said, was under scrutiny in many ways at the moment.

He expressed the hope that those who had accepted invitations to serve on the West Midland Regional Economic Planning Council would create a system which would be of advantage to the city, the region and the country.

Mr W. A. Kenrick, M.A., a former President of Birmingham Chamber of Commerce, proposed the toast of the Institute coupled with The Association of Scottish Chartered Accountants in the Midlands.

Training for the Profession

Mr J. W. Dallachy, M.A., C.A., President of the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland, in responding, commented on the education and training of apprentices. It was significant, he said, that for the past year or two it had been almost impossible to open any journal serving the profession without finding an article on some aspect of this subject. There appears, he said, to be an increasing awareness that office training plus correspondence classes may not necessarily be the best way of producing a good qualified accountant; and further that whole-time theoretical instruction in accountancy can be absorbed to a greater extent than was formerly thought possible without parallel practical experience.

It has been clear for some time, Mr Dallachy continued, that with the ever widening scope of the profession an apprentice could no longer acquire sufficient knowledge to satisfy his examiners solely from his everyday work in the office.

The Scottish Institute recognized this position many years ago and had been providing classes so that a candidate for the Institute's examinations could supplement his practical training by oral instruction.

In a reference to the recent criticism of the low percentage pass rates in the final parts of the examinations, Mr Dallachy said that this state of affairs was one which naturally causes anxiety to the examinees, which was shared by the Council and the examining board. He was satisfied, however, that the papers set and the standards required of candidateswere wholly reasonable.

Academic Year

Mr Dallachy went on to refer also to the criticism directed at the Council in the granting of day releases to apprentices. The critics, he said, apparently took no cognizance of the fact that it was five years since the introduction of the academic year which gave complete release from attendance at the office for a period of nine months during apprenticeship. The problems of education were never static in a profession which was changing as rapidly as the accountancy profession. The Council, Mr Dallachy said, was very much alive to this position and a report by the Institute's special committee on education and training, when available, should give considerable satisfaction to those who have the interest of future Scottish chartered accountants very much in mind.

Mr W. A. Nicol, C.A., F.C.C.S., Chairman of The Association of Scottish Chartered Accountants in the Midlands, proposed the toast of 'Our Guests', and Mr V. G. H. Feather, C.B.E., Assistant General Secretary, Trades Union Congress, responded.

In Parliament

Capital Gains Tax

Mr BARNETT asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, in view of the differing interpretations of the proposed capital gains tax on amounts to be taken as realized on death, he will state whether the gain to be subject to the proposed tax is to be the whole of the amount passing, or only the increase in value from Budget day 1965 to the date of death, subject to the first £5,000 of such gain being exempt.

Mr CALLAGHAN: For assets passing on death, as in other cases, the tax will be imposed on gains, not on the whole amount passing; and, as in other cases the gains to be charged will not exceed the difference between the value of the particular assets on 1965 Budget day and the market value at the date of death.

Hansard, Feb. 10th, 1965. Written answers, col. 103.

British Companies: Taxation

Mr EDWARD M. TAYLOR asked the Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations what information he has on the effective percentage rates of taxation levied by the Government of Ceylon on British companies in respect of their operations in Ceylon; and in particular, what the tax would be on gross profits of £50,000, £100,000 and £250,000.

Mr CLEDWYN HUGHES: The rate of taxation levied by the Government of Ceylon on British companies depends on whether the company holds immovable property in that country or not. In the former case, taxation amounts to 84½ per cent on chargeable profits, although under the existing tax laws the total tax payable is restricted to 80 per cent. In the latter case the total tax payable varies between 72½ per cent and 74½ per cent. These rates apply irrespective of the amount of profits earned. To relate these figures to gross profits might give a misleading impression as this would ignore allowable expenses, allowances for depreciation, etc.

Mr TAYLOR: Does not the hon. gentleman agree that even by the present Government's standards these rates of taxation are excessive and unreasonable? Would he also agree that even the small profits left after this taxation are not receivable in this country because of the ban on remittances imposed on July 31st last? Would he finally agree that in view of the very substantial contribution made by foreign and Commonwealth investment income to our balance of payments it is about time that the Government took a tougher line with those nations which are expropriating our assets without compensation or who are achieving the same result by putting on unreasonably high taxation and by banning remittances?

HON. MEMBERS: Speech.

Mr SPEAKER: Order. I think that the Minister had better answer at this point. We have heard enough of it.

Mr HUGHES: I agree that taxation in Ceylon is very high, but the hon. gentleman should remember that it has not precluded British companies from continuing to operate at a profit. It falls into a different category from the moratorium on remittances to which he referred and other measures damaging to British interests which were introduced in the July Budget to which he referred.

Hansard, Feb. 9th, 1965. Oral answers, col. 173.

British Companies: Transfer of Profits

Sir J. BARLOW asked the Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations what representations he has made to the Government of Ceylon to permit the transfer of profits in British registered companies from Ceylon to Great Britain; and whether he will make a statement.

Sir F. BENNETT asked the Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations what has been the result of the representations made to the Ceylon Government regarding the continuing moratorium on the payment of overseas dividends by British companies, and the consequences of the imposition of new taxation on British tea companies.

Mr CLEDWYN HUGHES: As my right hon. friend told the hon. Member for Wokingham (Mr van Straubenzee) on December 1st, he made representations to the Ceylon Finance Minister personally during November about all those measures in the Ceylon Budget which have had an adverse effect on British interests.

The position remains unsatisfactory. But, as the House will be aware, the Ceylon Parliament was dissolved in December following the defeat of the Government, and a General Election is due to be held on March 22nd. We intend to make further representations to the new Government after the election if the position remains unsatisfactory.

Hansard, Feb. 9th, 1965. Oral answers, col. 173.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr WINGFIELD DIGBY asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether on deaths after 1965 Budget day the value of an estate for estate duty purposes will be assessed before or after charging any capital gains tax which is payable in addition.

Mr CALLAGHAN: As I made clear in my statement on December 8th, any capital gains tax paid at death will be deductible from the amount of the estate for estate duty purposes.

Hansard, Feb. 16th, 1965. Written answers, col. 193.

Income Tax: Travelling Expenses

Mr LOMAS asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to allow necessary travelling expenses in excess of £26 per year, between home and place of employment, to be free of income tax.

Mr MACDERMOT: My right hon. friend could not accept this proposal.

New Office

New Dictating Machine

THE Dictaphone Co have introduced a new dictating machine – the Time-Master TA 650. This machine does not replace any of the current models.

The TA 650, measuring 9½ by 10 by 3 in. and weighing 8 lb., is provided with automatic gain input, which means that however loudly or quietly the dictator speaks, the recording is made always at the same level and therefore does not annoy the typist on play-back.

Pleasantly coloured in a two-tone beige shade, the Time-Master TA 650 is priced at £110 complete with microphone. This represents remarkable value for money for it is £20 less than the first Time-Master, the valve-operated Model 2, introduced to the British market in 1949.

New developments in the field of semi-conductors and plastics have led to improvements in the design of the circuitry and a plastic casing instead of the magnesium one in other Time-Master models. End of letter and correction marking on the TA 650 is achieved by the user merely pressing with his fingertip the appropriate stud on the carriage. He has no need to use a pencil.

Like all other machines in the Dictaphone range, the TA 650 uses the Dictabelt recording medium with its visible tone-grooves. As yet, only the dictating machine version of the TA 650 is available; the introduction of the companion transcribing machine will follow shortly.

Dictaphone Co Ltd, 17 Stratford Place, London W1.

Dictaphone Timemaster TA650

For Executive Dictation

A DESK unit for use with the Rols dictation unit has been introduced. It offers the executive an efficient method of recording telephone conversations, a loud speaker for his machine, and a cradle for the microphone. Most dictation machines can be readily available for the recording of telephone messages only if the machine is devoted entirely to this purpose. If not, it is possible that the telephone will ring in the middle of dictation, and the machine will not be immediately available.

With film recording, exclusive to the Rols, the executive, even if he is dictating letters, can record the message on his one Rols machine and keep the text entirely separate from his other recorded material. When a telephone call comes through, he simply cuts the film with the automatic guillotine.

He then presses the telephone button on his executive station, which is permanently connected to his telephone, and records the telephone conversation. When the conversation is finished, he cuts the film again; the offcut is available as a separate piece of film ready for transcription or filing.

He can now continue with his letter dictation, which although now in two parts, presents his typist with no problems because he can identify each piece of film for her by simply writing on them with pen or pencil.

Price: Desk Unit: £12 12*s*.

Block & Anderson Ltd, Banda House, Cambridge Grove, London W6.

Simple Plan-Filing System

FILAPLAN is the name of a new system for storing and filing plans of standard sizes. The plans are looped over a bar, above which runs a parallel bar and an end-retaining clip is put in position. This unit, capable of holding one hundred or more drawings, is suspended from a cradle that can accommodate twenty-five such units in a 36 in. wide cabinet. Title holders, with transparent shields, complete the system; the shields in clear, green, blue, yellow, pink and orange can be used to code sets or groups of drawings. The makers supply a plastic cover so that drawings can be protected when taken on site. The clamp bar unit is fitted with a handle for this purpose.

For Audit Recording and Checking

A PORTABLE tape recorder – the Aiwa – is now marketed by Tecades Ltd. This recorder fits into the pocket, and gives a recording time of approximately one hour. It is useful for accountants who wish to make on-the-spot audit notes. The unit is provided with three tapes and four spools, so that at any time notes which are made on the recorder can be posted to head office for action.

Four 1·5V. batteries give approximately eighteen hours of operation. The recorder has a typist's earpiece and loudspeaker playback controls.

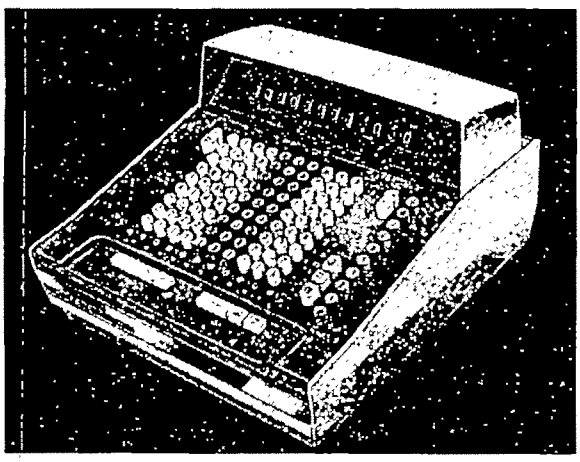
Price: £15 15*s* complete with all accessories.

Tecades Ltd, 217 Longley Road, London SW17.

Automatic Typing

THE Bradma-Dura is a new typewriter for typing top-copy letters or forms and creating either punched data tape or edge-punched cards for subsequent feeding to data-processing systems. Alternatively the tape or card can be read by the Dura for the creation of automatic letters, either complete or of selected paragraphs, or for entering static data on forms such as order/invoice sets.

Adrema Ltd, 65 Uxbridge Road, London W5.



Equipment

Automatic Decimal Pointing

THE first electronic desk calculator – Anita from Sumlock Comptometer – has been followed by a second generation model, the Anita Mk. 9. Because of the method of programing, this machine gives automatic decimal pointing in the answers to multiplication and division as well as combinations of these two functions.

Price: £425.

Sumlock Comptometer Ltd, 39 St James's Street, London SW1.

Anita Mk 9

Unit Furniture

THE new Harvey furniture range comprises desks and ancillary units and accessories in two series; an empty office can be equipped from the range. Series 1 is suited to conference and public rooms and executive suites; Series 2 is functionally the same but does not include every refinement of Series 1. This is the only distinction between the two. The units may be grouped to create planned work stations and these can be easily rearranged as office requirements change, because each unit is freestanding. Desks can be easily dismantled, thereby facilitating installation and removal.

Desk and companion unit tops are available in teak, formica and polytone for Series 1, and in polytone for Series 2. The teak, from Denmark, has a special finish which is resistant to hot liquid and ink stains. The new polytone from Germany – vacuum-formed over the steel tops – combines warmth with durability in a selection of colours.

Designed to cope with the international (ISO) paper sizes – though quarto and foolscap papers can also be filed – each unit can be adapted to suit the requirements of the most exacting O. and M. needs.

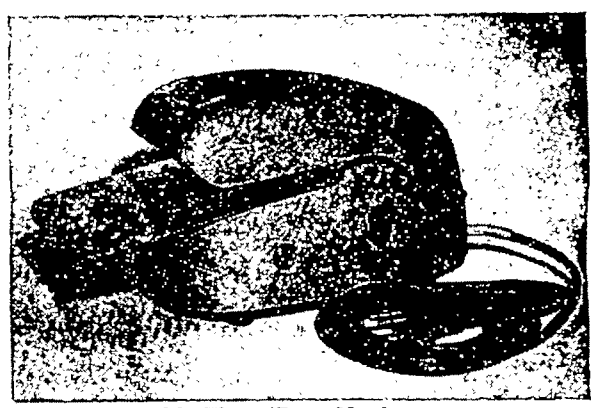
G. A. Harvey Ltd, Woolwich Road, London SE7.

Four-in-one Cash Registers

REGNA Cash Register Co have been manufacturing a four-drawer itemizing cash register for several years both for large department stores as well as for the busy small shop where one cash register for each assistant is impracticable. The new Regna four-drawer model incorporates an individual and lockable till for each assistant. An automatic reference on the receipt roll for each customer gives maximum security for both assistant and management. Assistant A. always uses button A and the corresponding drawer and each receipt is referenced accordingly. Each receipt is itemized and carries the total of the transaction.

There is a manager's lock for the grand total at the end of any trading period. At the end of a day's trading the sales assistants count the contents of their tills and write the amount on their cash envelope. This is then sealed and handed to the manager, who, with his security key, empties the accumulators of the four totals and compares them with the contents of the four cash envelopes. In this way a complete cash record control system is provided for the takings of each of the four sales assistants though one cash register only is needed.

Price: £200 approximately.



The Regna Cash Register Co, 26 Old Bailey, London EC4.

Power Operated Numbering

THE importance of numbers in any accounting procedure is not confined to the entry of sterling or decimal amounts; with the volume of forms in circulation in a large business it is sometimes vital to number or to date them before they start on their journey through the offices. Electrically operated numbering machines have been available for several years but the newest is the Reiner series from A. Ludwig. The Electro/Dater Numberer is available as a six-wheel numberer, a dater or combined dater/numberer. The numberer is normally fitted with consecutive and repeat actions but multiple automatic actions are available as an extra, and all models can be fitted with a die plate for engraving extra texts etc. An advantage of these electric machines is that the power of the printing stroke can be varied, making possible the taking of several carbon copies.

Price: Standard machine, £56–£110.

Education News-letter

The Education Committee of the Institute has introduced its first Education News-letter, the main purpose of which will be to bring about closer co-operation between the committee and those active in the field of education.

Published quarterly, the news-letter is being sent to universities, colleges of further education, the Department of Education and Science as well as to the education sub-committees of district, branch and students' societies of the Institute.

The first issue includes information on courses for articled clerks, the week-end residential course on teaching of accountancy due to take place next month at Huddersfield Training College for Technical Training (referred to in The Accountant of February 27th) and electronic data processing courses. Reference is also made to activities designed to attract more graduates into the profession. Suggestions or contributions for future issues will be welcomed particularly on the topics: use of teaching aids and equipment, textbooks for students, and the ways in which students

REGIONAL ECONOMIC PLANNING COUNCILS

Accountant Members

In a statement to the House of Commons replying to a question on the Order Paper on February 25th, Mr George Brown named the members of the Regional Economic Planning Councils in England, and those in Wales and Scotland followed later as written answers by Mr James Griffiths, Secretary for Wales, and Mr William Ross, Secretary for Scotland.

Six accountants are among those who have agreed to serve on the councils. They are:

West Midlands: Mr L. Hargreaves Beare, B.COM., F.C.A., deputy chairman and managing director, Needles Industries Group Ltd; Sir E. M. Clayson, F.C.A., chairman and managing director, Birmingham Post and Mail Ltd; Lord March and Kinrara, A.C.A., chairman, Rugby and District Council of Social Science.

Northern: Mr S. A. Sadler Forster, C.B.E., D.C.L., F.C.A., chairman, Industrial Estates Management Corporation for England.

Wales: Mr Julian Hodge, F.A.C.C.A., chairman, Anglo-Auto Finance Co, and Gwent and West of England Enterprises; Mr M. W. Rosser, F.C.A., a partner in the South Wales firm of Deloitte, Plender, Griffiths & Co.

The councils will be required to assist in the formulation of regional plans, having regard to the best use of local resources, and to advise on the steps necessary for implementing the plans. They will also advise on the regional implications of national economic policies.

LONDON AND DISTRICT SOCIETY OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

Luncheon Meeting

The final luncheon meeting of the present session of the London and District Society of Chartered Accountants will be held at the Connaught Rooms, Great Queen Street, London WC2, next Tuesday at 12.30 for 1 p.m. The speaker will be Mr George R. Pope, deputy manager, The Times, who will give the last of the symposium of views from the non-accounting world on chartered accountants, from an advertising viewpoint.

THE INSTITUTE OF INTERNAL AUDITORS

London Chapter

A dinner meeting of the London Chapter of The Institute of Internal Auditors will be held next Wednesday at 6 p.m. at the Kingsley Hotel, Bloomsbury Way, London WC1, when three members of the Chapter will present 'Case studies in the use of internal audit techniques to increase profitability'. The proceedings are informal and interested non-members of the Chapter will be welcome by arrangement with the Hon. Secretary, Mr N. A. Smith, Unilever Ltd, Unilever House, Blackfriars, London EC4.

The London Chapter is also holding two educational meetings at Unilever House on Monday, March 22nd. The first at 10 a.m. will deal with 'Product costing', and the second at 2 p.m. 'Ledgerless accounting in respect of customers' accounts and sundry creditors'. The educational meetings are primarily for members of the Chapter and their staff, but others may attend by arrangement with Mr R. A. Brown, Unilever Ltd.

COURSES FOR MANAGEMENT

Three one-day courses entitled 'Profit planning and control', 'Discount the cash flow' and 'More about D.C.F.' are to be presented in London on March 17th, 18th and 19th, respectively. The first two courses will be repeated in Manchester on March 25th and 26th. All three courses are to be presented by Dr James M. S. Risk, B.COM., PH.D., C.A., F.C.I.S., F.C.W.A., F.B.I.M., and further particulars are obtainable from Management Courses Ltd, Albany Courtyard, Piccadilly, London W1.

Receipts, receipts, receipts . . . some typed, but many scribbled and often illegible. A nightmare for the man who has to check them.

When executives' expense accounts drive company secretaries up the wall

FEW routine jobs are more tedious or less rewarding than checking the details of an expense account. So these days shrewd company secretaries enroll their executives as members of the Diners' Club. The Diners' Club credit card enables a member to stay at almost any hotel on credit, and also to eat, drink, travel and entertain—at home or abroad—at the best places within the scale approved by his firm. His expenses are looked after automatically by the Club, who keep accounts for him and send him a fully itemised statement which is acceptable to the tax authorities as proof of expenditure. This one clear statement takes the place of a mass of receipts. One monthly cheque to the Diners' Club pays the expenses of all executives who are members. And the only cost is the small annual membership subscription—there is no interest charge whatever for credit.

Each member receives a monthly statement itemising all his expenses in a form acceptable to the tax authorities.

£14,535

£10 a month invested over the last twenty years (January 1st, 1944, to December 31st, 1963)

would have provided a plan-holder, aged 44, today with life cover of £14,535 or a capital sum of £9,861 – for a total investment of £2,400 not taking into account tax relief.

A.V.S.P. is a completely new plan offering the advantages of Unit Trust investment with an exceptional ever increasing family security benefit.

This advertisement has been appearing nationally for some months. We find a great many of our clients rely on the advice of their accountants or taxation advisers. We would therefore invite your attention to the following special features:

CAPITAL GAINS TAX. The contract is written as a with profits insurance policy.

SURTAX. The units purchased, being part of the life fund, surtax payers are not liable for additional tax on the net income.

COLLATERAL. Full whole life cover from inception plus the units purchased give a growing collateral year by year.

INVESTMENT THROUGH SAVE & PROSPERS' INVESTMENT-TRUST-UNITS

You can be assured in that the investment element of the plan is with one of the oldest and most successful Unit Trusts in this country – Investment-Trust-Units – part of the Save and Prosper Group whose funds exceed £150 million.

GENERAL MANAGEMENT

In the

FOOD

INDUSTRY

AN EXCELLENT OPPORTUNITY EXISTS for ambitious men to build up a career in British Bakeries Limited (the Bakery Activity of Ranks Hovis McDougall).

They would undergo a period of training devised to suit the needs of each individual and could expect early appointment to an executive position leading to the general management of one of the many self-contained companies operated by British Bakeries.

Applications are invited from men aged between 30 and 40 with a commercial background who already occupy a position of responsibility at Middle or Senior Management level. Experience of the food industry, or a degree or professional qualifications (possibly in Accountancy or Engineering) would be an advantage. As General Managers they will be responsible for production, distribution and profitability in a fast moving trade and must have the qualities which this implies.

Particularly attractive terms will be offered and future prospects are extremely good.

There are vacancies in the NORTH-WEST, NORTH-EAST ENGLAND and the HOME COUNTIES, and interviews can be arranged in Manchester, Newcastle and London.

Applications quoting reference No. 13L/65, with details of age, qualifications and career, should be addressed to the Personnel Manager (B), Personnel and Training Department.

THE POST OF THE WEEK

As the working day gets shorter and shorter the problem of how leisure time is to be organized becomes more pressing. Is it one day to be organized on a national scale? Or can the wit of man continue to devise more and more ways of keeping mind and body occupied in our free time? For nobody takes more than a certain time to wash the car or plant roses. A British company that has for a long time typified 'the wit of man' by its ingenious devices for relaxation and education requires a qualified accountant to take complete charge of and modernize the entire accounting system. This man will be aged between 30 and 45 years, and will have had at least two years' industrial experience. The commencing salary range offered is £1,750–£2,000 p.a. The company is based in Enfield, Middlesex.

ACCOUNTANTS

British European Airways wish to make the following new appointments arising from the continuing growth in the volume and complexity of airline accounting work.

ASSISTANT COST ACCOUNTANT

Located at Head Office, Ruislip, he will assist with technical and administrative control of an accounting system providing a comprehensive system of budgeting, budgetary control, long-term forecasting and costing. Specific responsibility for the administration and output of the Costs and Catering Accounts units together with assisting in the development and introduction of improved methods are among the other major functions of this post.

Possession of a recognized accounting qualification coupled with sound practical experience in the operation and administration of a budgetary control and costing unit working to a rigid schedule is essential. A good understanding of the economics of airline operations and an analytical approach to problems with ability to make use of modern accounting equipment, is also required.

ASSISTANT ACCOUNTANT (ENGINEERING)

Located at London (Heathrow) Airport he will assist in the control and administration of the Engineering Accounts unit with specific responsibility for the administration and output of Engineering and Labour Costs sections. Assisting in the development and introduction of new methods and systems are among the other responsibilities of this post.

Possession of a recognized accounting qualification and practical experience in the operation of costing systems, preferably in the engineering industry, together with a sound knowledge and administration experience of a budgetary control unit producing information to rigid time-tables, is essential. Some knowledge of punched-card and computer equipment and systems is desirable.

ASSISTANT CARGO REVENUE ACCOUNTANT

Located at Head Office, Ruislip, he will assist in the technical and administrative control of a Revenue section incorporating Mail and Cargo accounting and Freight analysis. Participation in the development, introduction and implementation of data processing procedures and special work studies are included in the responsibilities.

Membership of a recognized accounting body and a sound knowledge of airline revenue accounting practices and procedures with at least five years' practical accounting experience, preferably in air transport, is essential. Ability to control and deploy a large group of staff and appreciate computer accounting and mechanized accounting techniques, is also required.

All three appointments offer a salary commencing at £1660 rising to £2020 per year.

KLEINWORT, BENSON, LONSDALE

LIMITED

A Prosperous Year

Statement by the Chairman, MR. ERNEST G. KLEINWORT, circulated with the Report and Accounts for the year ended 31st December, 1964.

Group Results

Shareholders will be pleased to hear that the Group has enjoyed another prosperous year. Increased dividends have been paid by both the principal subsidiaries and a final dividend of 17 per cent is recommended which, with the interim of 5 per cent paid last October, will make a total distribution for the year of 22 per cent as compared to 20 per cent for 1963. We propose to pay this final dividend immediately following the Annual General Meeting on 1st April and in future years to pay the final dividend by 5th April. This change of practice has been adopted in order to provide that all dividends will henceforth be paid in the fiscal year in which the greater part of the Group's taxed income is derived, thus ensuring that Income Tax will be deducted at the rate applicable to that year.

It is further proposed to capitalise £1,325,000 of the Share Premium Account and to issue to existing holders fully paid Ordinary Shares in the proportion of 1 new share for every 4 at present held. In order to reduce the disparity between the amounts distributed as interim and as final dividends, it is intended to pay in October next, in the absence of unforeseen circumstances, an interim dividend of 7 per cent on the increased capital. In response to the wishes of the Council of The Stock Exchange, it is intended, at the time of the announcement of this dividend, to give an indication of the trend of earnings.

Availing of funds to be received from Lonsdale Investment Trust, it is intended to subscribe in cash for a further 500,000 new £1 Shares in Kleinwort, Benson, thus broadening the base of the banking subsidiary.

Kleinwort, Benson Limited

The business of Kleinwort, Benson has continued to expand and this is reflected in improved results enabling the dividend to be raised from 12½ per cent to 13½ per cent. It has been decided to capitalise the Share Premium Account, amounting to £500,000, by the issue of the equivalent number of Shares to the parent company. As already mentioned, a further 500,000 shares of £1 each are being issued for cash at par to the parent company. The issued Share Capital of Kleinwort, Benson will thus become £6,000,000.

The Banking division has been increasingly active. The figure for Acceptances has grown appreciably and the Balance Sheet total for the first time exceeds £100 million. It is satisfactory to note that the normal flow of our business in Eurodollars continued smoothly throughout the sterling crisis last autumn. The entry of many newcomers into this field has brought about pressure on profit margins and these must be watched if the business is to remain healthy. In the field of medium-term export finance, we were pleased this year to finalise two Financial Agreements—one covering a new pipeline in Algeria, and the other, railway equipment for Mexico.

Close contact has been maintained with Australia over a period of years and we have been looking for opportunities to play an active part in the financial development of that country. We are, therefore, glad to have associated ourselves with Gibbs, Bright & Co. Ltd. and other Australian companies, and with our London friends, Antony Gibbs & Sons, Ltd., in the formation of a merchant banking company in Melbourne, named Merchant Bills Corporation. Although the establishment of the technical conditions necessary for the creation of a bill market on traditional lines, which at one time seemed imminent, is now deferred, we look forward to this constructive development before long, and in the meantime we plan for the new company to engage in other merchant banking activities.

The year under review was an active one for our New Issues division. The demand for merchant banking advice and services and capital-raising facilities in connection with corporate reorganisations, mergers, expansion and modernisation, continued unabated. The extensive and constructive changes occurring in British industry all have their financial implications, and companies are seeking our financial assistance and advice on a growing scale.

Our Investment Management and Advisory division has continued to expand and now extends to funds totalling over £300 million.

Subsidiaries Abroad

The desirability of having an offshoot of our business inside the European Economic Community had been in our minds for some time, and last summer we took steps to form a new wholly owned subsidiary company, Kleinwort, Benson (Europe) S.A., in Brussels, having selected this city for its geographically central location and as the seat of the E.E.C. headquarters. This new subsidiary has been active for about six months, principally in the fields of medium and long-term bond underwriting and investment, and we expect it to develop, and to improve the services we offer our customers interested in the Common Market.

Our two recently established Channel Islands companies have made good progress and they have every appearance of continuing to do so.

Lonsdale Investment Trust

The consolidated net revenue of Lonsdale Investment Trust after all charges and debenture interest showed a gratifying increase of some 16 per cent and the Trust's ordinary dividend was raised from 19 per cent to 21 per cent, involving a distribution of 87½ per cent of available revenue as compared with 90¾ per cent last year. The asset value of the Trust's Ordinary Capital at the year end, excluding the dollar premium, showed a diminution of 1s 8d per 5s unit, as compared with the previous year. Of this diminution, 1s 2d is accounted for by the transfer by dividend of £700,000 of revenue reserves to the parent company. The proportion of the Trust's funds invested in the U.S.A. increased from 25.5 per cent to 32.6 per cent, a rise of 7.1 per cent; of this, 3.25 per cent was attributable to investment of additional funds, and the balance to the better market performance of U.S.A. investments.

Judging from the increased dividends declared so far this year, one would expect a further rise in the Trust's income in the current year. But the unknown incidence, direct and indirect, of the proposed corporation tax and capital gains tax makes a reliable forecast at present impossible. It seems probable that corporation tax will not affect the Trust during 1965, and that thereafter, even allowing for the loss of income on the amount transferred to the parent company, earnings should be sufficient to cover the Trust's present dividend. The effect on the Trust's income of pending new taxation may well be such as to call for a reconsideration of the geographical disposition of investments which has been so successful in recent years. I do not, however, doubt but that, in the longer term, a satisfactory return will be obtained on the present asset value of the Trust's capital.

New Building

It is a matter of regret that progress on the new building in Fenchurch Street has been delayed by difficulties in the delivery of structural steel. These difficulties have now been resolved and full activity is expected to be resumed within a few weeks. The building should be ready for our occupation in approximately a year's time. In the meantime the inconvenience of operating from two buildings is overcome by the readiness of our management and staff to shoulder the additional burden. I am sure shareholders will wish me to convey to them our particular thanks and appreciation.

Economic Policy

I refer once more to the subject of Britain's closer association with the European Economic Community. Recent events have underlined the importance of adapting our economic policies to the realities of a rapidly changing world. With the steady advance of the E.E.C. and the continued American export drive, we are facing throughout the world two competitors who enjoy an economic and financial base much wider than this island alone can provide. I accordingly remain convinced that the U.K. can only achieve lasting stability and prosperity in association with one of the great trading units. It is therefore gratifying to see signs of renewed interest in this vitally important subject.

Regulating Monopoly

THE efficiency of any organization and not least the economy require such allocation of resources as will maximize output at the price the consumer is prepared to pay. It is generally agreed, however, that monopoly conditions do not conduce either to efficiency or competitive prices.

The Labour Party has never made any secret of its desire to limit the power of monopolies. It was the preceding Government, however, which sought under Mr HEATH's guidance to extend the work of the Monopolies Commission created by the Labour Government in 1948 and introduced the Restrictive Practices Court by the 1956 Act, as well as initiating the attack on resale price maintenance. The present Government now proposes further legislation to continue this policy of encouraging competition.

The Monopolies and Mergers Bill, published last week, will restore the size and the organization of the Monopolies Commission to what it was before 1956 by increasing its membership from the present total of ten to twenty-five. The Commission will be entrusted by the Board of Trade with the task of investigating any monopoly or proposed merger which would lead to, or strengthen, monopoly or restrictive agreement, or where it involves the acquisition of assets in excess of £5 million. Any proposed acquisition of a major British undertaking by foreign interests could be investigated.

The Government doubtless hopes to be able to provide three or four sub-commissions which will have the effect of accelerating the work of that body. The characteristic of such investigations in the past has been their slowness, which is undesirable both from the point of view of the affected interests and those of the wider public. Under the Bill the Board of Trade must refer to the Commission any monopoly or merger, actual or proposed, within six months of its completion or announcement and the Commission must make its report within six months or in exceptional circumstances within nine months. This could represent a serious delay for the firms concerned but, on the other hand, even with the Commission's own staff of experts, a thoroughgoing investigation must inevitably require such time.

The Labour Party's own special beliefs are reflected in the inclusion of a section dealing specifically with newspaper mergers. Whereas other, e.g. industrial, mergers will be referred to the Commission at the Board of Trade's discretion, any proposed newspaper merger where the combined circulation will then exceed three million per week – a small circulation which excludes nearly all the major newspapers – will automatically be referred to it.

The present Bill does not include the proposal made by Mr HEATH for a Registrar of Monopolies, but the Government intends that publication of price lists shall be enforced if deemed necessary. The Board of Trade will also acquire powers to regulate prices, but it is understood that such powers would be used only in the most exceptional cases where monopolies were not prepared to co-operate with the Government. In addition, the Bill seeks power to order monopolies and mergers to be dissolved, but the exercise of this power is restricted, in so far as any such proposal will have to have the approval of both Houses of Parliament.

The new Bill provides for the Monopolies Commission to examine the provision of services. This is an extension of the powers conferred upon it by the 1948 Act, where only goods produced by a company controlling one-third or more of the market were liable to be investigated. The new provisions mean that all services ranging from garages to professional services may be liable to investigation whenever one person or a single group controls more than one-third of the market.

It is noteworthy that the Bill specifically excludes any arrangements relating to the services of wage or salary earners since, in theory, these relationships are already controlled by existing legislation. What needs to be stressed, however, is that the benefits of restrictive and monopolistic practices which have developed in Britain since the 1890s, when the 'concentration' of industry through mergers and amalgamations in the face of growing foreign competition began, have not accrued solely to the companies, i.e. shareholders. Relative stability of profits has, more especially in recent years, been matched by corresponding security of employment for labour.

It can also be argued that it is only because of protection and the restraints upon competition that the wasteful utilization of labour in the United Kingdom has been able to continue for so long. This is especially well evidenced by the nationalized industries in recent years, where the terms of many labour agreements owe more to the statutory monopoly enjoyed by these undertakings rather than the productivity of the labour force.

The problem that will inevitably arise, both with the present widespread abandonment of resale price maintenance and the proposed anti-monopoly legislation, is how firms with reduced profit margins and less stable markets can continue to offer their present labour forces both economic security and rising wages. It would be as well if the Government, at the same time as it presses forward with the existing Bill, were to clarify its thinking and proposals for facilitating the mobility of labour. Competition cannot exist merely in one section of industry, i.e. prices, and not affect the terms of employment. In such circumstances the questions of the finance of redundancy payments and industrial re-training become very much more urgent.

The processes whereby the forces of competition will be released by the ultimate collapse of resale price maintenance and the regulation of monopoly will inevitably be slow. To pretend, however, that the main beneficiaries will be the consumer, and the sole loser the shareholder in the inefficient firm, would be naïve in the extreme. The creation of competitive conditions will bring casualties in its train. The Government may seek to ensure the provision of adequate social services to cushion the consequences of competition, be they redundancy or liquidation, but the bigger task will be to convince organized labour and management that such policies are in their interests. Most people in such circumstances tend to equate their short-term advantage with the longer-term national interest, although these may be diametrically opposed.

Last month the first list of goods seeking exemption from the ban on r.p.m. was published. It embraced 121 classes of product covering more than five thousand items. There will be others and the Restrictive Practices Court will have its hands full, at least for a while. Admittedly such activity may merely represent the death throes of an outmoded way of business life. There could, however, be a series of repeat performances before the Monopolies Commission.

The competitive urge cannot be infused into the ranks of either labour or management by legislation. It is just possible, however, that this Bill may provide one of the stepping-stones towards an economic policy which will ensure that at long last Britain will be able to bring her external payments account into balance.

The Free Pension Danger

by WILLIAM PHILLIPS
Author of Pension Scheme Precedents

THE scene is Watson's factory in the Midlands – a clutter of closely-packed lathes and other machinery, with overhead shafts ready to drive innumerable belts, but not a workman in sight. However, as the eye accustoms itself to penetrating the gloom it presently discovers in the far right-hand corner a partitioned-off space, too small to be dignified by the name of office, and bending over some rough sketches a man of advanced age can just be made out. He is Walter Smith, the only employee still in harness who was with Watson's father when the old man founded the business forty years ago.

There is not a machine in the whole shop that Walter cannot handle – has not, indeed, handled at various times in the years gone by, although today he spends all his time in his little hutch, occasionally producing some pregnant new idea. He is worth every penny of his £40 a week or thereabouts, even if 'young' Mr Watson (a mere 50 year old!) had not promised his late parent 'always to look after Walt'.

Clerical Staff Scheme

The comparatively small office staff have been taken care of these fifteen years past by a pension scheme formed to comprise the clerical staff of a group of small engineering firms; but, of course, by no stretch of the imagination could Smith have been included therein – a mechanical genius who was at home with something so inexplicable as the differential gear, but could barely sign his own name.

And now that at last, on this very day in fact, the 'works' employees have been assembled in the canteen to become members of a new scheme to provide them with pensions at age 65 – one to be reinsured by the Colossal Life Insurance Co – Walter is again not eligible, since the Colossal will not accept any entrant over the age of 60, and Walter is 61.

But this hasn't worried 'young' Mr Watson, because somehow, ever since the day when he was 12 years old, and Walter astonished him by showing how to bore a square hole, he has regarded the old retainer as an eternal part of the business. It was that helpful branch manager of the insurance company who, apologizing for excluding Smith from the policy schedule, suggested that the old man could in due season be paid a half-salary pension out of revenue, as and when the instalments became due.

Walter not Forgotten

So as the engineers and their apprentices come trooping back into the workshop, Mr Watson gets ahead of them and makes his way to Smith's 'office'. 'The lads are as pleased as you said they'd be,' he reports; 'half pay at 65 and the State pension will put them sitting pretty when their working days are over. And now, don't think you've been forgotten, Walter; any time after you are 65 and want to quit there's a £1,000 a year pension waiting for you – the firm'll see to that,' and though it had never occurred to Smith that he wouldn't die with his 'works' boots on, it was very nice of young Mr Watson all the same, and the two companions of forty years warmly shook hands. But neither Watson nor Smith had the faintest notion that they had just rendered Smith liable to income tax on the sum of £10,000 or so over the next four years. It is something of an anti-climax to mention that they had also rendered the company liable to a penalty not exceeding £50.

Now how in the world does this happen? Well, if Watson ever read the Finance Act, 1947, he has long since forgotten it in the intervening eighteen years; and as the famous sections 19–23 of that Act (now reproduced as sections 386–391 of the Income Tax Act, 1952) have been described by a legal commentator as 'unintelligible unless read and cross-read as a whole', it is more than likely that if Watson had ever read these sections it would never have occurred to him that an oral promise was 'an agreement' within the meaning of the Act.

So the offence will not be discovered until some time after Smith retires and items of pension paid to him beign to appear in the revenue accounts of the company; and by that time his special four-year income tax liability will have rolled up into a total overdue amount, even if penalties are not exacted, and the tragedy of that is that if Watson had put the promise in writing and had submitted it to the Controller of the Superannuation Funds Office of the Inland Revenue (as it is now called) its approval under section 388 would have come back with such alacrity as is marred only by dictating a letter on tape in London and having to send it to Blackpool to be typed, and no income tax liability whatever would have fallen on Walter Smith, and no penalty on the company.

And the ghastly thing about this tragedy is that there are tens of thousands of Walter Smiths in Britain today, living in complete ignorance of their fate. How did this come about?

Hair-raising Story

History is usually told chronologically forwards, but it will be convenient to trace the history of this legislation backwards. Take up, first, the report of the Committee on the Taxation Treatment of Provisions for Retirement, commonly known as the Millard Tucker (No. 2) Report (Cmnd 9063 of 1954), and turn to paragraphs 87, 88 and 89.

The first of these paragraphs points out that the 1947 legislation gave no new relief, that it was designed for the protection of the Exchequer, and gave no new or further benefit to employees. The second paragraph rehearses the pre-1947 position under which, if an employer made an arrangement to pay an employee a pension contingent upon his remaining in service to retirement age, the cost to the employer ranked as a deductible trading expense; but the employee incurred no tax liability until he began to receive the benefit, and then none on so much as was paid to him by way of a lump sum, instead of as a taxable annuity. The significant part of the third paragraph must be quoted verbatim:

> 89. An example taken from actual experience will best illustrate one of the more extreme types of scheme of this kind:
> An executive director was appointed at a salary of £2,000 per annum during his service, plus an annuity certain which was to begin to be payable to him or his personal representatives at the end of his period of service. The amount of the annuity depended on the date of termination of his appointment, and was to be payable over a period of from five to ten years, at the director's option . . . these annuities were exactly equivalent in value to an annual salary during service of £8,000, so that in reality the director was earning during his service the equivalent of £10,000 per annum; but the only amount which could be taxed in his hands during that service was the salary of £2,000 per annum . . . the director resigned his office after two and a half years, and then by a new agreement with the company surrendered all his rights under the original agreement, including the right to receive the annuity and the right to twelve months' notice, in return for a lump sum which exceeded £20,000. No part of this sum was taxable in his hands, although the whole of the £20,000 was allowable as a trading expense to the company paying it.

Truth or Fiction?

This blood-curdling story of iniquitous evasion is well known to everyone who deals with pension schemes; it created quite a stir in 1954 because everyone concerned read, and indeed studied thoroughly, the Millard Tucker masterly report; but while it is all very startling, and while almost every detail is given us except the name and address of this mysterious director, the colour of his hair and eyes, and 'any distinguishing marks', did he, in fact, ever exist?

The story has been accepted as factual truth for ten years, but let us turn back now to Hansard, H.C. Debates of 1947. We find the recently-installed Government seeking to introduce new restrictive legislation into the Finance Act of that year, its first indication being the following long-winded but rather uninformative Budget resolution:

> That it is expedient to impose liability to income tax where benefits (including benefits which are to be enjoyed only on the happening of particular contingencies) are or are to be procured or provided by bodies for persons who, as directors or otherwise, are taking part or are to take part or have taken part in the management of their affairs, or by employers of any kind for persons who are or are to be or have been their employees.

It is hardly surprising that this, as a forecast of what has now become sections 386 to 391 of the Income Tax Act, 1952, was completely misunderstood; for example, when this fifteenth resolution was read a second time in Report Stage and motion made to agree it, one member was under the impression that the House was discussing expense allowances, and seized the opportunity to speak at some length on the difference in principle between Rules 9 and 10 under Schedule E. The Solicitor-General intervened to say:

> 'What we want to do under this resolution is to introduce into the Finance Bill an anti-evasion clause to deal with the class of case in which a director, or any other member [sic] of a company is given what is really a revenue payment in the form of what, apparently, is a capital payment, with the result that he will contend that income tax is not payable upon it.'

He also spoke of retirement benefits provided by endowment assurances and handed out in lump-sum forms.

A Pertinent Warning

It is to the credit of a member who has recently attracted much public attention – a certain Mr Callaghan – that he voiced the opinion that the draftsman would be in some difficulties if provision were to be made sufficiently narrow to catch only the sort of cases which the Solicitor-General had in mind. As the members were soon to discover, and as we now know, the draftsman made no sort of attempt to make the provisions otherwise than so wide as to catch both the few guilty and the countless thousands of innocents alike. In the Committee Stage at that time the Chancellor of the Exchequer said:

'I am not trying to force anything through in a final form, but we are anxious to stop this serious leakage. I am advised that it ought to be stopped, but it may be that we have not arrived at the simplest and most effective way of doing it.'

How true! Then other Opposition members complained that from first to last they had been given no indication whether the loophole intended to be plugged was large or small, whether the five clauses, 'which were penal in their nature', were really intended to remedy 'some grave defect in the social structure of taxation', and references were made to the complicated language and to the fact that the clauses, if carried, would 'cause an enormous amount of trouble, bother, and in many cases hardship'. It seemed an extraordinary thing to set up so enormous a machine to catch what was, presumably, only a very small number of people.

The Solicitor-General said it would not always be in the public interest to state exactly what are the dimensions of the evil against which it was desired to legislate! He continued:

'It is simple to arrange and formulate a scheme in which the employee's right to the retirement benefit is only a contingent right – (with the result that the employee does not have to pay tax on the employer's contribution). I can assure Hon. Members that that device has been adopted and is being adopted. Therefore, we want to stop it.'

There is a deep mystery here, for stop it the legislation did not, and there are countless so-called 'top-hat' schemes in force today, duly approved by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, who need a large department to consider and approve, notwithstanding that they are precisely covered by the Solicitor-General's quoted words.

And what strikes one as extraordinary, on reading steadily through every relative page of Hansard of that year 1947, is that from first to last no one for the Government ever indicated how many of these evils ever existed, or gave more than a single, hypothetical example. This solitary example was that described as factual seven years later by the Millard Tucker report, but it was not claimed by the Solicitor-General to be factual; on the contrary, he said 'this is a case which is not very far away from what really happens'! (My italics.)

But let us take the story, which we now know to be apocryphal, at its face value. What valid objections could be taken to the mysterious Mr X.'s blood-curdling arrangement? Two, very clearly, and no more: first, that a pension costing four times the amount of X.'s salary is vastly excessive; and secondly, that whatever pension was reasonable should be paid to him as, or mainly as, a taxable annuity.

Why, then, these lengthy and complex interlocking sections, to stop two readily defined evils? Why not one short, simple section authorizing pension arrangements only if limited to two-thirds of final remuneration, with not more than one-quarter of the pension to be commutable for a lump sum on retirement?

Instead, we have this confused mass of verbiage, now sections 386 to 391; and it may be news to many that they were introduced on July 18th, 1947, in substantially different, but no simpler, language from that of the original Bill which, on the motion of the Solicitor-General, had been 'taken out' on July 16th. On this a member commented that in a Finance Bill it was very rare for such a large portion to be deleted. Nevertheless the deletion was agreed to, and it was not until the Third Reading that the five sections were seen by the House, and inserted practically without discussion, in their much revised but equally confusing form and with almost as sweeping an effect as before.

Epitome of Section 386 to 390

Ignoring, for our present purpose, lengthy provisions for adjudicating two schemes for the same class of employee as though they together formed one scheme, or one scheme affecting two classes of employee as though it were two schemes, these six sections may be thus epitomized:

> Excepting certain schemes otherwise approved by the Inland Revenue (sections 378 and 379) and certain schemes already in existence before April 6th, 1944 (section 387 (2) (a)), or certain others in existence before April 6th, 1947 (section 387 (1) (c)), in both cases only until they are altered (section 390 (2)), and an 'excepted provident fund or staff assurance scheme' (as defined by section 390), where a body corporate (section 386) or unincorporated society or other body, excluding a partnership (section 391) makes payments (section 386 (1)) to a scheme for the provision of 'any pension, annuity, lump sum, gratuity or other benefit to be given on retirement, or in anticipation of retirement, or, in connection with past service, after retirement' or on change of employment, otherwise than as a result of disability or death (section 390 (1)) of any director or employee, whether the accrual of benefits is or is not dependent on any contingency (section 386 (1)), the sums paid shall be deemed to be income of that director or employee and assessable to tax under Schedule E, unless the arrangement excludes 'controlling directors' (section 390 (1)) and is approved by the Inland Revenue (under section 388 (1)) with such of its six conditions (a) to (f) as the Inland Revenue is, in its discretion, unwilling to waive.

Now if a year or two after Watson and Smith shook hands on the oral agreement to pay the latter a pension, the former is referred to sections 386 to 391, by the time he has turned back and fro, as has just been shown to be necessary, he may be forgiven (though not by the Inland Revenue, except at their mercy) for not having understood subsection (2) of section 386. This covers the case where no payments whatever are made to secure the promised pension, and 'whether or not the accrual of the benefit is dependent on any contingency'.[1] and prescribes that the prospective pensioner shall be liable for tax each year on 'a sum equal to the annual sum which the [company] would have had to pay' to secure the pensions.

A Legacy for Walter

The arrangements we have been discussing, whether funded covenants or mere unfunded verbal promises, are designated by section 386 (1) 'retirement benefits schemes' and defined as schemes to provide 'retirement benefits' as in turn defined by section 390 (1). It is to be observed that section 388 (2) prescribes that the Commissioners may at any time, by notice in writing, withdraw section 388 approval, 'on such grounds, and as from such date, as may be (i.e. is) specified in the notice'. Thus, even if Watson had obtained Inland Revenue approval of Smith's 'retirement benefits scheme', as he should have done to protect Smith and to a less extent himself, and had chanced to die before Smith attained age 65, and in his will had left Smith some of the shares in the company amounting to more than 5 per cent of the total shares of which 45 per cent or more remained in the ownership of the Watson family, Smith, by becoming a 'controlling director' within the meaning of section 390 (1), would be faced with the invidious choice of effectively divesting himself of his pension rights (under section 387 (3)), or paying income tax on approximately £10,000 (under section 386 (2)).

Common Error

Accountants will probably agree that leaving shares in a 'family' company to an employee who has done much to build the business from its start is not a rare occurrence; but the granting of pension rights to older employees, and not always older ones alone, by uncovenanted, unfunded promises, whether written or oral, in blissful ignorance of the 1947 penal provisions (now section 386 (2)) is so common as to have given great concern to at least one practitioner.

It is to be observed that while section 390 (4) prescribes the duty of a body corporate (as enlarged by section 391)

> 'to deliver to the surveyor, within three months beginning with the date on which the scheme comes into being, particulars of any retirement benefits scheme coming into being'

it says nothing about any penalty for failure to deliver these particulars. For that £50 penalty one has to turn to section 46 (1) of the Finance Act, 1960.

Experience shows that the oral setting up of pension agreements without Inland Revenue approval, or even notification, cannot be prevented by company auditors or accountants, or consulting actuaries, or representatives of the life offices, or legal advisers, by inquiry in such technical language as 'Have you any other retirement benefits schemes?' or even 'Have you any other pension schemes?' One must use simpler language such as 'Have you, whether in writing or even orally, made any promises to anyone of any pension or other retirement benefit?' If the answer is 'Yes', the employer should confess at once to the Inland Revenue – and hope that they will be merciful.

[1] So that Smith cannot be protected by any words such as that he shall have a pension 'if all goes well'.

Capital Gains —

Assets Acquired before Budget Day 1965

by HALMER HUDSON, F.C.A.

THE Chancellor of the Exchequer has announced the extension of taxation of capital gains which will apply to gains arising from assets whenever acquired. The new tax will be imposed only on gains which are realized after the 1965 Budget day. A gain will arise when property is disposed of by sale, long lease, forfeiture, gift or on death. In the last two cases the asset will be treated as realized at its market value.

In the case of an asset purchased prior to Budget day 1965, which is sold after that day at a profit, the excess of the sale proceeds over the cost of the asset represents the gain. The Chancellor has stated, however, that the taxable gain will not exceed the difference between the value of the particular asset on the 1965 Budget day and the sale proceeds. Moreover, he says, the taxable gain will not exceed the actual gain.

In the case of an asset purchased prior to Budget day 1965, which is sold after that day at a loss, 'relief will be given only for the due proportion of the loss which accrued after that day'. It would appear that losses are to be ascertained in a different manner from gains.

In order to ascertain which rules apply (the gain rules or the loss rule) it is necessary, except in obvious cases, to compare cost with sale proceeds. This will involve considerable investigation in many cases.

One is reminded of the cost and difficulties encountered just after the Second World War in ascertaining the cost (and date of construction) of industrial structures for the purposes of capital allowances. Since the new proposals relate generally to any assets, tangible or intangible, which may have been in the same ownership for many years, the difficulties in ascertaining facts will be considerable. There will be many cases where the assets were acquired by gift, settlement or under a will and presumably in these cases market value at the time of the gift etc. will be the basis instead of cost – since there was no cost to the taxpayer. This would be consistent with the treatment of gifts etc. after the 1965 Budget day. There will be, for example, the problem of ascertaining the market value of a gift in (say) 1899. Alternatively, it may be provided that in such cases the gain will always be the excess of the sale proceeds over market value on Budget day 1965. Presumably there can be no allowable loss.

Gains

Assuming there is an actual gain, the taxable gain is the excess of the sale proceeds over the higher of cost of acquisition (presumably market value in certain cases) and market value on Budget day 1965. The taxpayer is given the benefit of whichever basis happens to give him the advantage. In no event is tax imposed on a gain in excess of that which is 'realized' after Budget day 1965. But even this 'realized' gain is exempt to the extent that it 'accrued' before that Budget day.

Losses

It appears that there are several possible interpretations of Mr Callaghan's statement regarding relief for losses.

One view is that, as with gains, the sale proceeds are compared with the higher of cost of acquisition, or market value on Budget day 1965. It is submitted that this cannot be Mr Callaghan's intention since it would result in allowing a greater loss than the actual loss where market value on Budget day exceeds cost.

Another view, which appears to be generally accepted, is that the sale proceeds are to be compared with the lower of cost or market value on Budget day 1965. This interpretation produces figures of allowable losses which are consistent with taxable gains figures. However, it is submitted that this interpretation is unlikely to be the correct view for practical reasons.

Assume that a taxpayer has purchased an asset prior to Budget day 1965 for £100 and he sells that asset after Budget day 1965 for £160. He has an actual gain of £60 and his taxable gain is, prima facie, £60. If he wishes to reduce his taxable gain he must produce evidence that the market value on Budget day 1965 was higher than cost. If he proves a market value of £110, his taxable gain will be reduced to £50.

Suppose the same taxpayer bought for £100 and sold for £40. He has an actual loss of £60. There is no point in his submitting evidence of market value since the only effect can be to reduce the amount of his allowable loss. The Revenue may have no knowledge of the market value on Budget day and would be in the position of having to advance evidence to reduce the prima facie actual loss of £60. It is surely unlikely that the taxpayer will be required to prove both cost and market value in order to be allowed any loss at all.

It is submitted that the most likely interpretation is that market value on Budget day 1965 is not relevant in computing losses. The actual loss is apportioned on a time basis. This view is admittedly inconsistent with the computation of gains. However, the Chancellor was careful to describe precisely the rule for computing gains. He did not use the same precision in defining losses and he did not say losses would be computed on the same principles as gains.

As regards gains, the United States Revenue code contains the same provisions as those proposed by the Chancellor. The relevant market value date in the U.S. was March 1st, 1913. As regards losses, the U.S. code permits, in principle, the whole of the actual loss to be deducted and the market value (on Budget day) has no relevance.

Examples

It seems there are eight possibilities which may arise (see table below). Assume an asset was purchased for £100 on April 6th, 1950 (say fifteen years prior to the 1965 Budget day), and it is sold on April 6th, 1970 (say five years after the 1965 Budget day).

(i) Loss Examples

In cases where the proceeds of sale are less than cost, the market value on Budget day 1965 has, it is submitted, no bearing on the amount of the allowable loss. Any appreciation since Budget day 1965 is not taxed and is effectively deducted from the unrealized loss up to that Budget day. The balance of loss is apportioned on a time basis and the proportion after Budget day is the allowable loss (Case A). Where there is an actual loss and the amount of depreciation since Budget day is less than that prior to Budget day, the taxpayer is allowed a greater loss than has occurred since Budget day (Case B). On the other hand, if the amount of depreciation since Budget day is greater than that prior to Budget day, the taxpayer's allowable loss is less than the depreciation which has occurred since Budget day (Case C). Furthermore, any unrealized gain up to Budget day is effectively deducted from the depreciation after that day. The balance of loss is apportioned on a time basis and the proportion after Budget day is the allowable loss (Case D).

(ii) Gain Examples

In cases where the proceeds of sale exceed cost, various interesting positions arise. If the market value on Budget day is less than cost, such market value has apparently no bearing on the amount of the taxable gain. Any gain is taxed in full by reference to cost. Any depreciation up to Budget day is deducted from the gain accruing after Budget day. The balance is the taxable gain (Case E).

It is suggested that in cases where the market value on Budget day exceeds cost, then, and only then, the market value on Budget day becomes of

Case	Cost	1965 Budget day Value	Selling Price	Losses on Higher of Cost or Value Basis	Losses on Lower of Cost or Value Basis	Losses on Time Proportion Basis
A	100	25	40	L 60	Nil	L 15*
B	100	45	40	L 60	L 5	L 15
C	100	90	40	L 60	L 50	L 15
E	100	75	160	G 60	G 60	G 60
F	100	110	160	G 50	G 50	G 50
G	100	145	160	G 15	G 15	G 15
H	100	175	160	Nil	Nil	Nil

* $\frac{5}{5+15} \times 60 = £15$

vital importance. In such cases, if the sale proceeds exceed the market value on Budget day 1965, the excess is taxable in full (Case F and G). Provided it can be shown that cost was less than market value on Budget day 1965, the precise amount of the cost is not material, and there is presumably no need to devote time to ascertaining cost.

Where the amount of appreciation after Budget day exceeds the amount prior to that day, the taxpayer is not able to spread the appreciation on a time basis and must pay tax on the higher appreciation since Budget day (Case F). Where the amount of appreciation, prior to Budget day, exceeds the amount after that day, the taxpayer does not have to spread the appreciation and pays tax only on the lower appreciation since Budget day (Case G).

Finally, if the sale proceeds do not exceed the market value on Budget day 1965, such proceeds are ignored and no taxable gain or allowable loss will arise. There may be a considerable difference between cost (at time of acquisition) and market value on Budget day 1965. It will not matter what the selling price is, provided it is within that range. Both the unrealized gain up to Budget day and the overall gain are not taxed. The loss since Budget day 1965 is, however, not allowable (Case H).

Ascertaining Figures

In the majority of cases, the market value should be ascertained as close to Budget day 1965 as possible. Disputes with the Revenue will obviously arise in later years where retrospective valuations are attempted. The valuation should be performed by competent persons. In the United States experts have fared badly, unless their testimony has been well documented and supported by other substantial evidence. Where it is reasonably certain that Cases F, G or H will not apply, perhaps a valuation can be safely dispensed with. Regard must be had to the cost of the valuation compared with the amount of tax likely to be involved.

In practice, there may be no need to ascertain cost figures until a disposal takes place. However, the facts must be ascertained one day. In the case of individual taxpayers, these facts are normally not available on the accountant's files. Perhaps we should offer to prepare an inventory of asset costs for our individual clients as an aid to tax planning and to keep down our charges in future. Certainly our clients must begin to conserve invoices and other papers.

In the United States, in the case of Burnet v. Houston (283 U.S., page 228 (1931)), it was held that the onus of proof of figures lies with the taxpayer. The impossibility of proving a material fact is a misfortune to be borne by the taxpayer. The judgment continued 'neither can the presumption be indulged that the cost of the respondent's interest in 1906 was the value of the interest in 1913, or (it does not follow) that such cost was the value even in 1906.

Case Law

The sixteenth amendment to the United States constitution was passed on March 1st, 1913, and from that day the first Federal income tax code became effective. What is now section 1053 of the United States Revenue code sets out the provisions relating to the taxation of capital gains on the sale of assets acquired before March 1st, 1913. Basically, that section is the same as Mr Callaghan's proposals – with 'Budget day 1965' inserted in lieu of 'March 1st, 1913'. The only substantial difference is that, whereas in the United States the taxpayer is allowed in principle the full amount of his loss, it is suggested that the United Kingdom taxpayer will only be allowed a time proportion.

Section 1053 has given rise to considerable litigation concerning the market value on March 1st, 1913, and hundreds of cases have been heard. The accumulated judgments over fifty-two years can provide valuable guidance to us.

The most famous case is Couzens v. Commissioner (11 B.T.A. 1040 (1928)) and concerns the valuation of Ford Motor Co stock. It is well worthy of study. The long and carefully prepared opinion by the Board of Tax Appeals reveals almost its entire philosophy as to the nature and measure of share values. The principles laid down are far too numerous to be included here.

It is fair to add that the United States was more fortunate than ourselves. It so happened that price levels had been fairly stable for several years prior to March 1st, 1913. Consequently large differences between historical cost and March 1st, 1913, value were not general (except possibly in the case of shares). Furthermore, tax rates were lower then. However, virtually every mineral deposit in the United States had to be valued at March 1st, 1913. Due to inflation and economic crises, our problems are likely to be more numerous and of even greater significance to the taxpayer.

The most important evidence of market value would be actual sales on or near the date of valuation. However, forced sales may have occurred which are unrepresentative. A large block of shares may, on the one hand, only be saleable at a discount from the quoted prices of ordinary lots or, on the other hand, possess a special value for the purposes of control. Restrictions on sale may have an adverse influence on value.

In the United States, market quotations are not conclusive of value against the Revenue. Share quotations create merely a rebuttable presumption, namely, that the value of the shares is the quoted price. The classic judgment in Strong v. Rogers (14 A.F.T.R., page 1224 (1933)) is noteworthy. In 1929 'thousands of unskilled and unreasoning buyers and sellers had entered the market in ignorance of the true facts and purely for the purposes of speculation'. Typically, one of the quotations involved was $106–$109·19 per share. The Court fixed a value of $65 per share. There have been cases of manipulated share prices and there are decisions of the United States Courts concerning the effect of high pressure selling campaigns. There is the 'exhausted market' argument under which particular sales have exhausted the market so that the market value is subsequently lowered. Quotations or offers without sales are frequently offered in evidence. Their defect is that they often give no indication of quantity. If the figures are reliable and the quotation is unlimited as to quantity normally no dispute arises.

In valuing shares in the United States due regard is given to the fair market value of the company's assets and other pertinent factors. A balance sheet at January 1st, 1913, with an apportionment of profits to March 1st, 1913, is usually accepted for this purpose. Goodwill and other intangibles are, of course, to be included and are usually valued on the basis of capitalizing excess earnings.

Effect of Capital Gains Tax on Market Value

No one has ever satisfactorily appraised the effect of capital gains tax upon share valuations. The subject is highly controversial and much can be said on both sides. What can be said is that the capital gains tax tends to retard selling. Very little arithmetic is needed to demonstrate that it would require a very serious rise in prices to make selling worth while. The result is to tend to remove large sellers from the market and thus, to some extent, to create an artificial stock-market level based upon the scarcity of new buyers.

Tax practitioners are being deluged with requests for advice. Their field is being expanded considerably just as the scope of taxation is being widened. Previously the choice has often been taxable income versus exempt income. Now the third choice of capital gains treatment must be considered. The question of timing becomes increasingly important; for example, when to take the gain or loss. The arithmetic of investment policy is being made more complicated. Life will never be quite the same again.

American Women Accountants

IN an informative booklet prepared by the American Women's Society of Certified Public Accountants and the American Society of Women Accountants, girl graduates from high school are urged to make a career in accountancy. The prospect has five attractions. First, it is challenging and rewarding, both intellectually and materially. Secondly, it lends itself to a combination of career and homemaking. Thirdly, it allows of part-time employment for wives and mothers. Fourthly, it insures against the financial hazards of widowhood. Lastly, wives also may resume their careers after a spell of exclusive and concentrated homemaking.

The material rewards are estimated to range from $6,000 a year for a beginner with a college degree to upwards of $50,000 for top jobs, and if any further inducement is needed, professional accountants are reputed to earn 'as much or more than doctors, dentists, lawyers and engineers'. The major areas of employment are industry and commerce, the practising side of the profession, charitable, scientific and educational foundations of a non-profit-making character, Government service and educational institutions. Of the women who responded to a questionnaire circulated recently, 56 per cent were in industry or commerce and another 27 per cent were either partners or employees of professional firms. From the same source, it was ascertained that 41 per cent were single, 36 per cent were married, nearly 13 per cent were divorced or separated and 8 per cent were widowed. About 3 per cent did not disclose their marital status.

If one includes the mere males, the profession in America appears to be booming. In a previous edition of the booklet, published in 1962, it was stated that the number of certified public accountants in the United States was over 69,000 and that 80,000 would be needed by 1970. The new edition proclaims that the number by mid-1963 was over 84,000 and that 120,000 would be needed by 1970. It would seem that there is a promising future for the girl graduate who decides to become what the booklet calls 'a budget and forecast accountant'.

Understanding of Annual Reports

A RECENT publication of the Research Foundation of the Financial Executives Institute, states that stockholders' understanding of accounting terms is deteriorating, if anything, research having shown that one-third could not define 'liabilities' and one-half 'assets', as against 21 or 22 per cent for each in a survey of 1947. When it comes to 'cash flow' and 'paid-in surplus', understanding is practically nil.

The conclusion is drawn that perhaps the fact should be accepted that financial statements cannot be made both intelligible to the layman and useful to the professional analyst and corporate management. In this case the Journal of Accountancy questions whether the auditor should take some responsibility for the 'highlights page' and the president's letter with annual reports. To this it gives a qualified 'yes'. Reporting can still be improved, for accountants themselves do not agree as to precise definitions for such terms as 'goodwill'. The Journal would have further study made of the suggestion that independent auditors might include in their opinion a statement that text and highlights of the annual report are consistent with the income statement and balance sheet and not misleading.

CANADA

Continuing Education for Accountants

OVER 1,700 members of the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants have enrolled in the 1964–65 continuing education programme. Gross revenue is $52,000 as against $38,000 last year, and this is expected to be $60,000 from 2,000 members by April 30th, when the fiscal year ends. The Institute's programme is about to start its fifth year. Ten courses are now available and four more will be added this year. Over seven hundred members attended the new 'tax planning' seminars in eight provinces.

Financial Reporting

LOOKING into the future of the profession, Mr R. Dudley Stewart, C.A., writing in the Canadian Chartered Accountant, says that while we are more interested in the future and the creation of wealth than in the past, with mere conservation of wealth, financial reporting is still strongly rooted in the past and on historical cost. He would have annual reports provide, as a minimum, sufficient financial and other information to enable an easy assessment to be made, not only of current operations, but also of management's performance in coping with the past and preparing for the future.

Mr Stewart urges the profession to take a positive view, not seeing the future as one of countless problems but of countless opportunities. It must submit to the rigorous disciplines imposed by the rewarding challenges of the future. Thus it will serve Government, business, and the whole economic and social structure in a way that will ensure its acceptance as one of Canada's truly learned professions.

MALAYSIA

Professional Organization

THE accountancy profession in Malaysia is composed of men and women with a wide variety of qualifications obtained in a large number of countries throughout the world. They have in recent years seen the need for an indigenous professional body, to establish standards and maintain them in the light of local conditions, and for historical reasons this has led to the setting up of two organizations with similar objectives but slightly divergent philosophies.

The Malaysian Association of Certified Public Accountants (previously the Malayan Association) was formed in 1958 by members of the Association of Chartered and Incorporated Accountants in Malaya and the Malayan branch of the Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants. In 1963 an educational programme was started, and the Association now conducts its own examinations in Kuala Lumpur and Singapore. It has been assisted in this by the Overseas Accountancy Examinations Advisory Board of the three Chartered Institutes in the British Isles. A prescribed period of practical experience in the profession is a pre-requisite for membership, which now numbers 230, of whom a little over half are in public practice.

In 1963 the Singapore Society of Accountants was established by the Singapore Government. Members of nine accountancy bodies (in the U.K., Eire, Canada, Australia, New Zealand and India) are eligible for admission. Local residents may sit for examinations of the Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants and the Australian Society of Accountants. In addition, the Singapore Polytechnic prepares full- and part-time students for a full professional Diploma in Accountancy, shortly to be converted into a degree of the University of Singapore and this qualification is recognized for admission to the Society. Qualified persons are admitted as provisional members and may apply for full membership after obtaining appropriate practical experience.

The difference between the two bodies lies in the fact that the Singapore Society aims at an integrated profession, in which accountants from Government and industry will have equal status with those from public practice. It therefore recognizes experience in a wider variety of contexts than does the Malaysian Association. The Society already has a membership of over three hundred, of whom rather more than one-half are in public practice, and there is considerable local sympathy with the point of view that the sooner the two bodies can develop a uniform approach to professional organization, the better for their members.

NEW ZEALAND

Machines to be Converted to Decimals

THE New Zealand Decimal Currency Board has issued to all companies, local authorities, retailers and grocers details of the Government's arrangements for the conversion to decimal currency of adding machines, cash registers and accounting machines. Included in the scheme are plans for the payment of compensation to machine owners when the conversion of machines will not be undertaken at Government expense. In an explanatory statement, the secretary of the board, Mr J. N. Searle, said it was estimated that about 75,000 of the three types of machines in New Zealand would be eligible for conversion at Government expense and that a further 10,000 would attract compensation for loss of residual life. A further 25,000 of these machines, by the time New Zealand changes to decimal currency in July 1967, would have reached the end of their normal lives and no Government assistance would be offered for these.

Mr G. W. Brown, the recently retired assistant General Manager of Railways, has been appointed chief cost accountant to the Decimal Currency Board by the Government. The Parliamentary Under-Secretary to the Minister of Finance, Mr Muldoon, said Mr Brown would be in charge of the massive machine conversion project. 'This is a task of considerable magnitude involving the expenditure of some millions of pounds of Government funds', he said.

GERMANY

A Computer Boom

IN a recent issue of Der Betrieb, Dr Herbert Gross refers to the astonishing growth of interest in recent months in the installation of computers by industrial and trading firms, banks and many other undertakings, and the accompanying competition among manufacturers of these machines, who offer lectures and courses on the importance of computers for reducing costs and facilitating the rationalization of business.

Numerous new factories for the manufacture of computers have appeared in Europe and the annual sales are valued at about five hundred million dollars, with an estimated annual increase of 30 per cent until in 1970 or thereabouts the annual turnover will be about three milliard dollars.

It had been feared in the past that the computer would reduce the number of people in employment, but now there was an increasing scarcity of programmers and craftsmen to build and install computers, and a consequent anxiety among firms over competition by their rivals who had already installed a computer and thereby achieved an advantage. Computers can be a decisive aid to quicker and more accurate decisions and much depended on whether top management understood their possibilities and worked with them. The computer firms laid much stress on the ability of managers to explain the strategic importance of computers and to make clear to those who would later use them how greatly efficient management depended on an information system which would set out the alternatives for future action and enable the right course to be decided on.

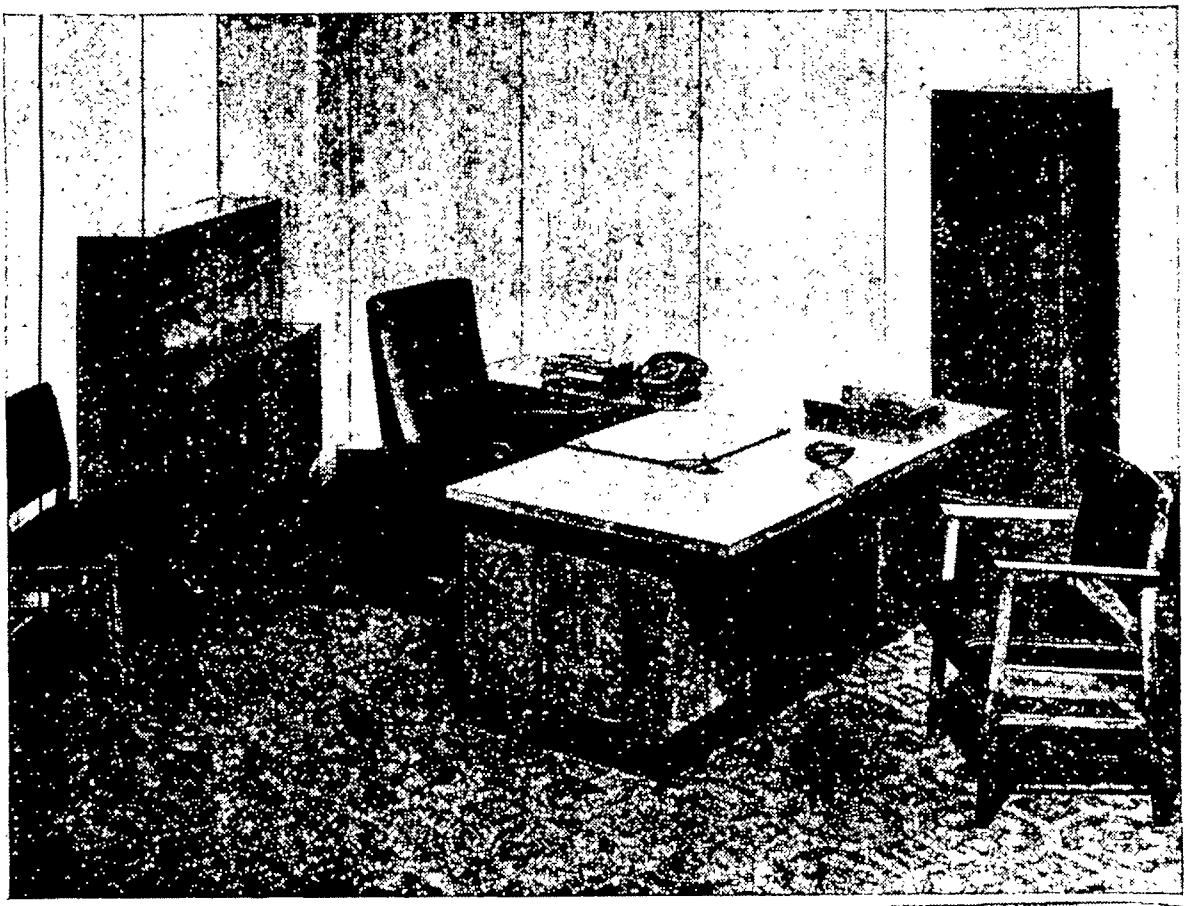
The computer boom which is going on is producing a new form of competition among undertakings whose results are clarified by computers and who have a basis for their decisions which is far more definite than dependence on intuition alone.

ISRAEL

Association of Certified Public Accountants in Israel

AT the recent annual general meeting of the Association of Certified Public Accountants in Israel, Mr F. S. Somekh, F.A.C.C.A., F.C.W.A., was re-elected President for the ensuing year. Other officers elected were:

Vice-President: Dr D. Haft.
Hon. Secretary: Mr I. Strauss.
Hon. Treasurer: Mr A. Fass.
Council Members: Messrs R. H. Arnon, Z. Bentov, Dr L. Bergmann, A.A.C.C.A., Messrs A. Cohen, H. L. Cohen, A.A.C.C.A., M. David, F.A.C.C.A., Z. Grupel, S. Jacobson, M. Knoll, I. Mann and I. Tenenhaus.



FINLAND

New Officers of Finnish Institute

THE following officers of the Finnish Institute of Accountants, K.H.T.-Yhdistys-Föreningen C.G.R. have been elected for the year 1965:

President: Mr Viljo Havu.
Vice-President: Mr Uno Lönnqvist.
Members of Council: Messrs Veikko E. Hakala, J. V. Heikkonen, Otto Sivonen, Antti Helenius and Marcus W. Pacius.

Mr Svante Kihlman, who has been President of the Institute for the past five years, did not seek re-election. He has been appointed special delegate of the Institute for international co-operation, especially the Union Européenne des Experts Comptables Economiques et Financiers (U.E.C.), and for work in the committees for a new common joint-stock company law of the Scandinavian countries.

THE INSTITUTE OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS IN ENGLAND AND WALES

Incorporated Accountant Members

FOLLOWING the annual meeting on May 6th, 1964, the Council has given further consideration to the representations that incorporated accountant members should be permitted to call themselves 'chartered accountants'. The Council intends to submit to members at a special meeting to be held on July 14th, 1965, proposals to amend the Royal Charters and Bye-laws in order to modify the present position of incorporated accountant members.

(2) The Council intends to propose, inter alia, that with some exceptions persons who are or may become members and who are entitled only to be designated incorporated accountants, may apply for redesignation as chartered accountants and to use the letters A.C.A. or F.C.A. as appropriate.

(3) The exceptions, in the main, relate to incorporated accountant members practising in the United Kingdom. Such members will not be eligible for redesignation unless:

(1) they were so practising as their main occupation before February 1st, 1965; or
(2) at the time of application they are able to satisfy a requirement of appropriate experience in the United Kingdom for a period of thirty months in the office(s) of another person or persons in practice in the United Kingdom.

(4) An incorporated accountant member who is redesignated and who practises subsequently in the United Kingdom will lose his redesignation as a chartered accountant and the right to use the letters A.C.A. or F.C.A. unless or until such member can comply with one or other of the requirements in paragraph 3. A member not entitled to redesignation may describe himself as an incorporated accountant member of the Institute and use the letters A.S.A.A. or F.S.A.A. as appropriate.

RESIGNATION FROM THE COUNCIL OF THE INSTITUTE

THE resignation of Mr Eric Hay Davison, F.C.A., from the Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales was received with regret at a meeting of the Council held on March 3rd and reported elsewhere in this issue.

Mr Davison, who is a member not in practice, was elected to the Council in April 1961. He has served as a member of the Technical Advisory Committee and as a member of its several subcommittees. In addition, he has also been a member of the Consultative Committee of Members in Commerce and Industry, the Education Committee (of which he was Vice-Chairman from January 1963), the Examination Committee, the Parliamentary and Law Committee, and the Public Relations Committee.

FACTS ABOUT CORPORATE CAPITAL

THE latest issue of Financial Statistics includes a new table showing the sources and uses of funds of industrial and commercial companies. The most striking feature is the dominating importance of retained profits, which in 1963 totalled £2,438 million, compared with £486 million of bank loans, a mere £110 million of new ordinary issues, and £212 million of debentures and preference shares. The last two mentioned figures for 1964 are £150 million and £250 million respectively. It is noticeable, however, that during 1964 the total issues of both types of capital declined in successive quarters.

More than half of the total identified new funds, which in 1963 totalled £3,361 million, was absorbed in gross fixed capital formation at home, i.e. £1,801 million. Stocks and work in progress increased by £309 million, and liquid assets by £428 million. The ancillary table showing gross trading profits and dividend payments reveals the fact that the unadjusted and quarterly profits figures have risen in the first three quarters of 1964 by more than 1963. On the other hand, whereas during 1963 ordinary and preference dividends absorbed in the first three quarters 36 per cent of gross trading profits, the corresponding figure for the first three quarters of 1964 is just under 34 per cent.

VIEWS FROM THREADNEEDLE STREET

IT seems likely that there will be some slackening in the growth of world trade in 1965, states the latest issue of the Bank of England Quarterly Bulletin. In contrast, 1964 was an exceptionally good year, but even so it is felt that current conditions abroad should still offer scope for reasonable expansion in United Kingdom exports. On the other hand, they will be achieved only 'if these markets are cultivated, if costs are kept down, and if capacity is available to meet the increase in foreign demand', observes the Bulletin. Reviewing the various measures taken by the Government, the Bulletin comments that together they constitute 'an appreciable deflationary force', the effects of which might become increasingly apparent as time passes. It is for this reason that so much discussion is currently taking place as to the degree of deflationary pressure which the April Budget should exert. On this point it is noted that a considerable further diversion of resources to exports is going to be needed if the country is to pay its current way, repay debts, and rebuild the reserves.

On a lighter note, the Bulletin reviews some aspects of the note issue. Each year over two thousand million new bank-notes are issued, and the volume of paper involved amounts to about four thousand tons. Readers will be surprised to learn that a package of even the lowest denomination note is worth very much more than its weight in gold. Londoners, it seems, have a preference for 10s notes, most of which begin and end their life in the metropolis. The provincial branches issue more £5 notes than does the Bank of England in London, and there is an especially large demand for notes of higher values from the Bank's Birmingham branch. During 1964 more than half of the value of notes issued from that branch were in £5 and £10 denominations, compared with an average of 40 per cent at the other provincial branches.

CERTIFIED ACCOUNTANTS' COMPUTER EXERCISE

AS part of its aim to provide a varied programme of activities, the London and District Society of Certified Accountants recently co-operated with International Computers & Tabulators Ltd in staging a business management exercise on a computer.

The exercise took place last Saturday at the data processing centre in I.C.T.'s new riverside headquarters at Putney, and to enable it to get off to a smooth start the participants had already been briefed and organized into five-man teams, each one representing an imaginary company.

At the beginning of the exercise they were given information about their company's asset position and its trading results for the previous period, but because they were coming to the computer at very close intervals they had to keep to a very rigid time-table which allowed only thirty minutes in which to formulate each series of decisions.

Slick staff work by the I.C.T. personnel ensured a faultless operation and the teams steered their companies through six trading periods. An 'inquest' at the end of the exercise revealed widely varying degrees of business acumen (and one or two shattered reputations), but it gave a very convincing demonstration of the value of a computer as an aid to training business managers in a practical environment.

TRUSTEE SAVINGS BANKS' CHEQUES

AFTER a long period of consideration and administrative adjustment, the Trustee Savings Banks have formally introduced their cheque system for customers. This innovation should make a useful contribution to a reduction of the circulation of money in favour of the cheque system.

The scheme was first considered six years ago and will come into operation on May 21st. The Royal Assent to the Bill permitting Trustee Savings Banks to open current accounts and issue cheque-books was given in February 1963, and agreement has now been reached with the clearing and Scottish banks to use their clearing mechanism for Trustee Bank cheques. The service will be available for personal payments but not for trade purposes to depositors with trustee banks who open non-interest bearing current accounts at a cost of 1s per cheque plus stamp duty, subject to an allowance of ten free cheques a half-year for each £50 of retained balance. Of this 1s the joint stock banks will receive 6d.

The Trustee Savings Bank Credit Transfer Clearing Centre is to be opened in the City of London towards the end of May. To begin with it will receive from the clearing banks paper for the credit of Trustee Savings Banks throughout the country most of which will be salary and wages credits.

CHARTERED SURVEYORS AND THE NEW TAXES

THE Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors has made some interesting observations to the Chancellor of the Exchequer on his proposed new taxes. On the capital gains tax it points out that a lease-back can take the form of the sale of a land-asset or it may be an uplifting of rent for a cash sum. It enables the holder to raise capital for development. It is not fundamentally different from raising money by mortgage and should receive not less advantageous tax treatment. Where a capital gain has accrued over a long period, this should be reflected in the tax bill. Capital gains tax should not apply to an increase in value through the acquisition of vacant possession of previously let agricultural land. Rich men can buy depreciating assets like leaseholds to offset the gains on other assets. Double taxation, by levying a betterment charge as well as capital gains tax should be avoided. A necessary corollary to capital gains tax is an amortization allowance to holders of leases of business assets.

DISCLOSURE IN ACCOUNTS

MANY years ago a new book entitled Shareholders' Money provided a thoughtful reminder to the boards of companies that their primary obligations were to their shareholders. Since those days company legislation has been much improved and more done to protect investors, but as the Bloom affair showed, full information is not always disseminated as fast

This is My Life . . .

CHAPTER 267

IT had been a happy day when Ken, our erstwhile junior cashier, and Bessie, Prinny's personal secretary, were married, and it should have been happier still when twins arrived nearly a year later. The only reason it wasn't was that Ken had fallen in the last stand at Arnhem. When Bessie saw that the babies had their father's carroty hair she called them her 'Red Berets', and somehow the names stuck to them over the years.

Prinny, our personnel director, never forgets old employees or their dependants, and he pressed hard for jobs for the twins when the time came some years later.

I took 'Red' into the accounts department and he was a good choice from the beginning. He had tireless energy and unfailing reliability behind a big cheerful grin; he commenced an evening commercial course at the local college right away and showed every sign of going far.

We started 'Berry' in the typing pool and she became my personal secretary shortly after. She was the ablest girl I'd seen for a long time. She was also one of the prettiest. She had long auburn hair and a wide happy smile, and it was remarkable how many of the male staff found it necessary to visit her to ask to refer to my files, or to leave me a message – or to inquire was she free that evening. The younger chaps practically queued up. I felt myself to be in loco parentis in a way, 'Berry' being alone in the adjoining office, but I needn't have worried. She was a thoroughly nice girl and Bessie was right to be proud of her.

I only started to worry when the deputy-chairman's son came a-wooing. He's big and sophisticated and thoroughly spoiled, and he could afford to give 'Berry' a glimpse of a standard of life she'd never seen before. The queue vanished discreetly. He made up for its absence by regular visits, lounging easily against the wall and chaffing her rather patronizingly. He had a gleam in his eye and 'Berry' didn't seem as happy as she used to be. Their private lives weren't my responsibility, but I knew his bad record with girls in the past.

She was taking my dictation one morning when the deputy-chairman came in suddenly to look at the draft agenda. I said casually: 'You know "Berry", of course', a not unreasonable comment in view of the fact that by then his son was waiting for her three evenings a week in his long sports model. He grunted curtly enough and she looked uncomfortable, so I asked her afterwards how she found him. She was rather non-committal, an indication of loyalty which I approved, but I gathered that he disapproved pointedly of the friendship. She was probably finding its course far from smooth, poor kid, the D.C. having strong views about his blue-blooded superiority to the lowlier ranks of life, and his wife being several lengths ahead of him.

A 'must' in our profession is to provide for impending known commitments. Another, is not to reveal all we know. I didn't tell her that when I commented to the D.C. about his son's thrice-weekly habit he growled that the boy must sow his wild oats and should learn sense soon. Similarly, I didn't tell the D.C. I'd overheard 'Red' tell his sister that he'd swing for somebody if he'd stepped out of line. The impending commitment looked unpleasant; perhaps its translation into a long-term reserve against a future possibility would improve matters.

That night some anonymous gossip-columnist telephoned the D.C.'s wife to seek confirmation of a report just received for publication of her son's engagement and impending marriage. 'King Cophetua and the beggar-maid,' he gushed, 'she married her boss.' The dragon took immediate action. Within the week her ewe lamb was en route for the U.S. for a four-months' training assignment; he shrugged off the friendship without turning a hair. . . . 'Berry's' been a lot happier since, and the queue has formed up again.

Oddly enough, they never identified that columnist. But then discretion is another 'must', especially when in loco parentis to Ken and Bessie's children.

as it should be. Nor, as some recent take-over bids served to remind us, do boards give shareholders adequate information upon which to assess the value of their shareholdings. One may well ask why investors should have to wait until a bid is made before they are given such information.

These and some other points are made by Mr H. B. Rose in a postcript to the new edition of his Eaton paper Disclosure in Company Accounts[1] which was first published eighteen months ago. He notes, too, that the proposed new corporation tax with its incentive to retain profits, strengthens the need for fuller disclosure so that shareholders may know what is being done with their money.

If Britain is to become 'a share-owning democracy', those most anxious to see this development brought about should exercise their influence as much as possible in this important sphere.

FINANCE OF NON-QUOTED COMPANIES

THE Board of Trade has made a study of the finances of companies whose shares are not quoted on stock exchanges in the United Kingdom. The survey appears in the February issue of Economic Trends published in the first week of March. The article concerned deals with a sample of these non-quoted companies for the three years 1960 to 1962. The first part of the article describes a sample drawn from companies, which file accounts with the Registrar of Companies under the Companies Act, 1948, and gives an estimate of numbers of the various classes of company. The second part of the article discusses the income and finance of non-quoted companies, but the range is limited to those with assets of £0·5 million and these are in the same size range as the quoted industrial and commercial companies which have been analysed by the Board of Trade for some years. Of the 402,800 companies registered in Great Britain on December 31st, 1961, 86 per cent were private concerns claiming exemption from filing their accounts with the Registrar.

The article considers the relation between the profits of these non-quoted companies and the book value of their assets. On the average of the three years, the non-quoted companies earned a rate of return on the book value of assets over one-third higher than quoted companies except for three industrial categories mentioned in the article. It is suggested that one reason for the difference may be that the fixed assets of non-quoted companies were valued at lower prices than those of quoted companies. Non-quoted companies may not have revalued their assets recently, since they are under no pressure to do so from the investing public.

General and Engineering Industries

WITH a commendable policy of providing shareholders with accounts which give up-to-date information, the directors of General & Engineering Industries Ltd have had written into the 1963–64 accounts the estimated results of a number of realizations, some of which were still in train at the end of the financial year.

General & Engineering Industries Ltd was formerly Arusha Industries Ltd, which was developed as an industrial holding company out of the Arusha Plantations company formerly operating in Tanganyika. Over the past three years the present board has been wrestling with the problems resulting from Arusha Industries' earlier over-expansion.

The basic point in the latest accounts is that profits and losses of Barrow Haematite Steel Co Ltd, Smith Patterson Co Ltd, Taylor Hoists Ltd, Vigilant Investments Ltd and Sarah Properties Ltd have not been consolidated – 'being of a terminal nature'. Realization estimates have been placed in the balance sheet.

A receiver and manager was appointed for the Barrow Haematite company in February 1964 and shortly afterwards the company was put into liquidation.

Selling-up

The Barrow company's smaller undertakings at Barrow have been sold by the receiver and the realization of the company's metal stocks has proceeded satisfactorily and is largely completed. As no acceptable firm offer has yet been obtained for the ferro manganese plant and dock, which comprise the major fixed assets, arrangements are being made for their offer for sale by tender.

From the proceeds of asset realizations so far the receiver has repaid, together with interest, £350,000 to the company's bankers in respect of their first charge and also the £400,000 7 per cent First Mortgage Debenture stock. It is not now expected that any liability will arise in respect of General & Engineering's guarantee to the Barrow company's bankers.

Owing to continuing losses and the need for substantial further investment, the sale of assets of Smith Patterson and its associated company, Taylor Hoists, was begun during the year and has almost been completed. Up to December 31st, 1964, £179,000

The Group has elected to have the charge for profits tax computed by aggregating the results of all subsidiary companies. The losses, less profits, of companies not consolidated have resulted in a profits tax saving of approximately £25,000.

3. CAPITAL COMMITMENTS AND CONTINGENT LIABILITIES

(a) Commitments for capital expenditure not provided for in the accounts amounted to £88,000 at 30th September, 1964 (£91,000 at 30th September, 1963).
(b) At 30th September, 1964, there was a contingent liability of £162,655 in respect of bills discounted.
(c) General & Engineering Industries Ltd. has guaranteed bank overdrafts of subsidiary companies up to £420,000.

4. OVERSEAS SUBSIDIARY COMPANIES

(a) Sterling conversions have been made at the rates of exchange at 30th September, 1964.
(b) For administrative convenience the accounts of an overseas subsidiary company were made up to 31st March, 1964.

had been received by General & Engineering and a further £55,000 of debts were in the process of being collected.

Vigilant Investments owns the land and buildings which have not as yet been sold. Sarah Properties is being placed into liquidation and a small property has been sold.

Profit Position

The capital loss applicable to General & Engineering as a result of these developments is estimated at £1,149,298, of which £1,077,913 is in respect of Barrow Haematite. When the liquidation of the Barrow company has been completed, appropriate steps will be taken to revise the capital structure of General & Engineering.

How the withdrawals affected profits is shown clearly in 'Results of subsidiary companies' included in the reprint. Such a breakdown of subsidiary earnings is necessary in the accounts of an industrial holding company and in this particular case the breakdown is essential to a proper appreciation of the group's position.

The subsidiaries concerned were either contributing little to revenue or making losses and the changes have therefore had little effect. But that does not alter the fact that the position should be clearly shown.

Realizations and liquidations, apart from those immediately concerned in the latest accounts, have been taking place since 1961 but in the meantime the more positive policy of improving management, expanding existing businesses and acquiring new ones has been going on. Drury Engineering is a successful new-comer to the group.

Change

Accounts in the style of those presented by General & Engineering may be regarded as an excellent method of providing shareholders with a clear view of the group's position even though the figures, so to speak, provide a forward look to the company's situation. The company's auditors do not qualify their report other than to make the point that the Directors' Report, the substance of which has been covered in this column, has to be taken into account along with the balance sheets and the profit and loss account to give the 'true and fair view'.

This is a far cry from the dear dead days, not entirely beyond recall, when even a company's final dividend was not considered a 'current liability' because shareholders had not approved the payment. The General & Engineering accounts may be an extreme example of change of attitude but they are a sound example.

Industrial holding companies' accounts are not the easiest to produce in an informative manner and the General & Engineering company's position was made all the more difficult by the liquidation and realization position, but the form of presentation achieved is praiseworthy.

CITY NOTES

A PLETHORA of news on profits, dividends, asset revaluations, mergers, take-overs and new issues has kept stock-market interest lively but it has failed to make any real impact on stock-market sentiment. This side of the Budget, interest rather than business is likely to be the pattern.

Smaller investors seem mainly of a mind to take tax-free profits while the taking is good and institutional investors are more of a mind to take advantage of the availability of high yield fixed interest stock issues than they are to place funds in the equity market.

The busiest people in the City now are the merchant banks dealing with a string of new issue and merger operations. Introduction of General Motors shares with a sterling quotation on the London market is one of the most interesting marketings.

But London certainly has no monopoly where new issues and placings are concerned. In Birmingham and Liverpool there is currently a high level of new issue activity with the obvious objective of share marketings ahead of the Budget.

CD

for a new, low level in transport economy

Switch to Contract Depreciation for your transport fleet, and you'll find that your overall costs are substantially reduced. But more than that, CD enables you to predict with extreme accuracy your transport expenditure from one year to another. You incur no heavy capital expenditure or unexpected costs—under Contract Depreciation trucks are replaced automatically before large-scale overhaul or repair bills become due.

There are numerous other worthwhile advantages of CD:—

- You get all the tax reliefs, including investment allowances
- Greater availability gives your fleet higher profit-earning potential
- You can tender for contracts more competitively
- Unproductive administration time is heavily reduced
- Tailor-made contracts mean fewer idle trucks or part loads
- Reduced repairs and maintenance necessitates fewer skilled and scarce mechanics, and smaller workshop accommodation
- Established over 15 years to ensure continuous service and the availability of trucks to meet all your requirements

GET ALL THE FACTS ON CD—send for our brochure "Contract Depreciation—the reasons why". Simply ask your secretary to clip the coupon to your letterhead and post it—TODAY!

Waiting for the Accounts

SIR, – Reference is made to the article 'Waiting for the Accounts' in your issue of January 9th.

I wondered if the writer took one fact into account, that is, that under American practice the date of the audit report is usually the date on which the field work is completed. On the other hand I believe that British practice is usually for the report to be dated the actual date on which the accounts are typed in the Accountant's Office. I am not, of course, suggesting that, if the dates were to be brought to a common base it would be found that the American accounts were any earlier than those of the British. I would certainly say that from my experience, I agree with the results of the surveys stated in the article.

I was most interested in the writer's statement that any business operating on the scale to justify a quotation for its shares should produce for the use of its own management, accounts at least once each quarter. I would have thought that in this day and age, the minimum requirement would be once per month and that no more than fifteen days after each month.

Yours faithfully,
E. C. THORBURN, F.A.C.C.A.

Factoring and Debenture-holders

SIR, – As a director of the largest specialist factoring company in Britain I have naturally read Mr Gordon Wright's most interesting article published in your issue of January 16th, called 'A New Look at Leasing'.

I think that it is a pity that leasing and factoring should have been considered in the same article as, although they can both be looked upon as methods of financing a business, they are in fact quite different, leasing being the financing of fixed assets (long-term), while factoring can be used to finance current assets (short-term). I do agree, however, that serious thought should be given to the inclusion of both leasing and factoring arrangements in the published accounts of companies.

The article discusses the way in which the interests of debenture-holders could be affected by factoring. In practice my own company and presumably others as well invariably ensure that debenture-holders are informed before a company commences to factor with us.

Additionally, before entering into a factoring agreement with a company we consider very carefully the effects that factoring will have on the turnover and the profits of that company and, as far as possible, we ensure that factoring will actually increase the profitability of the client company.

To this extent, therefore, the interests of debenture shareholders and/or preference shareholders are strengthened as the cover for the interest or dividends to be paid to them should be increased.

It is perhaps worth making the point that factoring does not, in fact, create any liability for the company being factored as, of course, any finance provided is entirely without recourse to the client company and therefore involves no repayment obligation.

Mr Gordon Wright is quite right in his conclusion that factoring is one of several ways of financing a company and quite obviously, therefore, the alternative sources of financing should also be considered. It is worth noting however, that factoring is by no means only used as a method of finance – it includes a large element of service which is shown by the fact that a number of our clients do not avail themselves of our financial facilities.

Yours faithfully,
F. S. B. FOSTER,
Director,

Fothergale Co Ltd

SIR, – Like your correspondent, Mr Budd (March 6th issue), I have been following the Fothergale Co Ltd series on B.B.C.-2 and reading your weekly comments on each episode, but far from sharing his anger I find myself in complete agreement with the criticisms you have expressed.

To avoid misunderstanding, I hasten to explain that I am not opposed to the use of economic analysis and statistical methods as aids to solving business problems (I have gone on record elsewhere as advocating them), but what worries me is that the commercial director, Tom Rudyard, was for ever dressing them up to convey the impression that they are a ready-made panacea for all our management difficulties.

That ridiculous incident when he sought to provide Fothergale's with 'instant market research' by plotting the correlation between expenditure per head on male underwear and national income per head of population and coming up with Sweden as the smart answer, provided just one example of how the programme plumbed the depths of naïvety. It is not difficult to think of others, some of them referred to in your Weekly Notes, with Rudyard handing out his fake remedies like a 'quack' selling patent medicines on commission.

The real stuff of business management ability is the quality of the underlying assumptions that have to be made about such fundamentals as market potential, production requirements, marketing expenditure, etc., and it is to these that the programme producers should have devoted their effort. The statistical and other techniques are just so much dressing on the salad and it is dangerous to inflate their importance in the manner that was so flagrantly practised in this series.

Accountants (fuddy-duddy or otherwise) would not claim they can provide management with all the answers; but it would have evidenced greater awareness about what really goes on in business if the B.B.C. had paid more attention to the well-proven financial control techniques that one usually finds are being operated by the more successful and efficient businesses. Even if it does sound rather like special pleading, I think a qualified accountant would have made a more useful and realistic contribution to Fothergale's problems, and he could hardly have been as guilty as Rudyard was of needlessly introducing incomprehensible jargon into every possible situation.

Like you, Sir, I am still puzzling over that magic phrase 'sub-optimizing profits in the short term'!

Yours faithfully,

DESMOND GOCH, A.A.C.C.A.

Car Allowances

SIR, – I have been asked to look into the question of what car allowances should be paid to individuals when they run their own cars instead of running a company-owned car.

I would be pleased to know if any of your readers have overcome the problem of how to deal with the question of depreciation.

I am attempting to work out a fair basis of reimbursement mainly for representatives whose annual mileage varies between 12,000 and 20,000. They are expected to run a car that is less than four years old. This complicates depreciation calculations.

The type of car varies with the status of the individual and ranges from approximately 1,200 c.c., 1,500 c.c. to an 1,800 c.c. car.

I have examined the Automobile Association costings but these are not particularly relevant as they are based on an annual mileage of 10,000 and on the car being used by its owner for the full life of the car (ceasing at 80,000 miles).

Yours faithfully,

Pinner, Middx. D. A. POTTER.

Taxation Cases

Full reports of the cases summarized in this column will be published, with Notes on the Judgments, in the 'Annotated Tax Cases'.

Coathew Investments Ltd v. C.I.R.

In the Court of Appeal – January 29th, 1965

Surtax – Undistributed income of company – Investment company – Sum paid to charity – Whether deductible – Income Tax Act, 1952, sections 245, 256 (1), (4), 257, (2), 262 (2), 415 (1), (2), 524 (4), Schedule 24.

The appellant, a controlled investment company within Chapter III of Part IX of the Income Tax Act, 1952, covenanted with a charity that for seven years it would pay £1,450 a year less income tax. The company paid that amount to the charity from 1955–56 to 1959–60, and claimed to be entitled to deduct the same amount in computing its income for the purposes of that chapter.

It was contended for the appellant that section 415 of the Act, which treated such a sum for surtax purposes as the income of the settlor, and which applied to an individual, did not apply to a company, so that section 262 (2) was unaffected thereby, and the covenanted sum was deductible by the appellant company. It was contended for the respondents that as the covenanted sum would not be deductible by an individual, it was not deductible for the purposes of Chapter III of Part IX of the Act. The Special Commissioners decided in favour of the appellant.

Held (affirming the judgment of Mr Justice Ungoed-Thomas): the covenanted sum in question was not deductible.

Parker v. C.I.R.
Tomlinson v. C.I.R.

In the Court of Appeal – February 8th, 1965
(Before THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS (Lord DENNING), Lord Justice DANCKWERTS and Lord Justice DIPLOCK)

Income tax – Transaction in securities – For meeting future liability for estate duty – Capitalization of balance of profit and loss account – Applied in paying up non-charged debentures – Debentures redeemed after seven years – Whether debentures securities – Whether transaction in securities – Whether circumstances satisfied – Whether tax advantage obtained – Whether section directed to redemption or only to capitalization – Time of obtaining tax advantage – Finance Act, 1940, section 20 – Companies Act, 1948, section 455 (1) – Income Tax Act, 1952, sections 184, 186, 199, 245, 246 – Finance Act, 1960, sections 27, 28, 43.

The appellants were shareholders in a private company with an issued share capital of £35,002 in £1 ordinary shares. The appellants were concerned as to how liability for estate duty could be discharged on the death of any of them, and particularly on the death of one of them, and they wished to have liquid funds available for that purpose without interfering with the company's ability to carry on trading, and without involving a forced sale of shares in the company. On December 31st, 1952, there was a credit balance of £69,914 on the profit and loss account.

On May 18th, 1953, the company amended its articles of association to give it power to capitalize any part of the amount standing to the credit of a reserve account or the profit and loss account, and to apply the same amount in paying up any issued shares or debentures. On the same day an ordinary resolution was passed that £35,002 out of the amount at the credit of the profit and loss account should be set free for distribution to the members; but that it should be applied in paying up debentures for securing the £35,002. Debentures were issued to the members on July 13th, 1953, in amounts equal to the par values of their shares. The debentures were redeemable at the company's option at par on six months' notice after seven years. They did not create any charge on the company's assets.

On July 14th, 1960, the company gave notice to the debenture-holders of its intention to redeem the debentures on January 14th, 1961. At that time the credit balance on the profit and loss account was £128,720. On January 14th, 1961, the debentures were redeemed, and the redemption money was paid to the appellants. On August 18th, 1962, the respondents served notice on the appellants, under section 28 of the Finance Act, 1960, that the tax advantage obtained by the transactions should be counteracted by surtax being computed on the basis that the sums received by them should be treated as net amounts of dividends.

It was contended for the appellants:

(1) that the debentures were not securities within section 28, because (i) they were not charged on the company's assets; (ii) they did not give any advantage over a mere debt; (iii) that they did not involve a creditor/debtor relationship; (iv) that they did not provide for the payment of interest;
(2) that there had not been a transaction in securities, in that the redemption of the debentures did not relate to securities;
(3) that there was no tax advantage within the section;
(4) that as Chapter III of Part IX of the Income Tax Act, 1952, was directed to tax evasion through redemption, section 28 of the Finance Act, 1960, should be restricted to tax evasion through capitalization;
(5) that the capitalization of the £35,002 did not yield a tax advantage.

The Special Commissioners decided in favour of the appellants.

Held (1) (reversing the judgment of Mr Justice Ungoed-Thomas (Lord Justice Diplock differing on this point)): the transaction was not a transaction in securities within section 43 (4) (i) of the Finance Act, 1960; (2) the appellant was not in consequence of that transaction in a position to obtain, nor did he obtain a tax advantage; (3) the notice under section 28 of the Finance Act, 1960, be cancelled.

Coats's Trustees v. Lord Advocate

In the House of Lords
Wednesday, February 24th, 1965
(Before Viscount SIMONDS, Viscount DILHORNE, Lord MORRIS OF BORTH-Y-GEST, Lord GUEST and Lord DONOVAN)

Estate duty – Marriage settlement – Husband entitled to alimentary liferent – On dissolution of marriage to wife for life – On husband's death leaving issue and wife remarrying half of income to her – Issue of the marriage – Divorce decree against husband – Remarriage of wife – Death of husband – Death of wife – Survived by children – Whether other half of income passed on first husband's death – Finance Act, 1894, section 1.

In 1920 there was an antenuptial marriage settlement by the deceased on his future wife, under which the husband was to be entitled to an alimentary liferent of the settled fund. If the marriage was dissolved by the death of the husband, the whole annual income was to be paid to the wife for life. If there was issue of the marriage, and the wife married again, she was to have half the income for life, and the other half was to be applied to the maintenance and education of the children. The marriage took place, and there were three children. In 1931 a decree of divorce was obtained against the husband, and in the following year the wife remarried. Her first husband, the deceased, died in 1958, and she died in the following year.

It was common ground that when she divorced the deceased, the wife became entitled until her remarriage to a liferent of the whole of the settled income by virtue of the rule of Scots law whereby, as stated in Lord Stair's Institutes (Vol. I, Chapter IV, page 20):

> 'Marriage dissolved by divorce either upon wilful non-adherence or adultery . . . the party injured hath the same benefit as by the other's natural death.'

It was also undisputed that on her remarriage the wife remained entitled to half the income of the settled fund.

It was contended for the appellants that, when the wife remarried and became entitled to half the income, the children of the marriage became entitled to the other half; and that thus there was no passing of that half on the death of the deceased. It was contended on behalf of the respondent that the half-income in question passed to the deceased on the remarriage of his former wife, and passed therefore, on his death, so that estate duty was attracted on the occurrence of that event.

Held (affirming the interlocuter of the Court of Session, Lord Dilhorne and Lord Donovan dissenting): the rule stated in Lord Stair's Institutes operated only as between the parties to the marriage, and did not operate for the benefit of the children; on the wife's remarriage half the income reverted to the deceased; and it passed on his death for estate duty purposes.

THE INSTITUTE OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS IN ENGLAND AND WALES

SPECIAL AND ORDINARY MEETINGS OF THE COUNCIL

At special and ordinary meetings of the Council held on Wednesday, March 3rd, 1965, there were present:

Mr W. Guy Densem, President, in the Chair; Mr Robert McNeil, Vice-President; Messrs J. F. Allan, G. R. Appleyard, W. L. Barrows, T. A. Hamilton Baynes, J. H. Bell, C. J. M. Bennett, Sir Henry Benson, C.B.E., Sir William Carrington, Messrs G. T. E. Chamberlain, D. A. Clarke, C. Croxton-Smith, S. Dixon, J. V. Eastwood, W. W. Fea, Sir Harold Gillett, Bt, M.C., Messrs J. Godfrey, L. C. Hawkins, C.B.E., J. S. Heaton, J. A. Jackson, R. O. A. Keel, Sir William Lawson, C.B.E., Messrs R. G. Leach, C.B.E., R. B. Leech, M.B.E., T.D., E. N. Macdonald, D.F.C., J. H. Mann, M.B.E., R. P. Matthews, D. S. Morpeth, W. E. Parker, C.B.E., S. J. Pears, F. E. Price, L. W. Robson, Sir Thomas Robson, M.B.E., Messrs J. D. Russell, R. G. Slack, D. Steele, A. G. Thomas, A. H. Walton, R. Walton, F. J. Weeks, E. F. G. Whinney, J. C. Montgomery Williams, R. P. Winter, C.B.E., M.C., T.D., E. K. Wright, Sir Richard Yeabsley, C.B.E.

Resignation from the Council

The Council received with much regret the resignation of Mr Eric Hay Davison, F.C.A., Chelmsford, from his membership of the Council. Mr Davison had been a member of the Council since 1961.

Building Societies Act, 1962

The Council approved for submission to the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies a memorandum entitled Auditors of Building Societies, suggesting certain amendments to the Building Societies Act, 1962, so as, inter alia, to provide building societies with a remedy if an auditor fails for any reason to carry out his duties in due time.

Companies Winding-up Law and Rules

The Council approved for submission to the President of the Board of Trade a memorandum on 'Points for Consideration in Connection with the Revision of the Companies Winding-up Law and Rules'.

Education Newsletter

It was reported that the Education Committee had decided to issue a quarterly Education News Letter to universities, colleges of further education, the Department of Education and Science, district societies, branches and students' societies. The aim of the newsletter is to make the committee's activities better known in the educational world.

(Copies of the first news letter are now available from the Institute. Future issues on a regular basis may be obtained on request.)

Teacher Training

The Council noted that at the request of the Education Committee a week-end residential course on the teaching of accountancy is to be held at the Huddersfield Training College for Technical Teachers from April 8th to 11th, 1965. The course will provide an introduction to teaching method with reference to basic accountancy subjects and will be attended mainly by those who have just taken up teaching or who are intending to do so in the near future on a full-time or part-time basis.

The Certificate in Management Information

Registration for first examination

The Council approved for publication the following statement:

(1) It is intended that the first examination will be held in October 1966 and students for this examination are required to register with the Institute not later than October 1st, 1965. Registration cards will be obtainable from April 1st, 1965.

(2) Candidates will not be eligible to register for the examination unless two years have elapsed, or will have elapsed by the date of the examination (October 1966), from the date of their admission to membership. For the purpose of eligibility a member will be deemed to have been admitted on the first day of the calendar month in which he was in fact admitted. Thus a candidate will not be eligible unless admitted before November 1st, 1964. There is no requirement as to practical experience.

(3) The registration card must be accompanied by a registration fee of two guineas, which will not be returned if the candidate subsequently withdraws from the examination. Cheques should be made payable to 'Chartac' and crossed Lloyds Bank Ltd, Finsbury Circus. There will also be an entry fee for the examination, the amount of which has not yet been fixed.

(4) The syllabus and an illustrative reading list for the examination appears in the booklet A Scheme for the Certificate in Management Information, published in April 1964, copies of which are obtainable without charge on request from the Institute. A booklet containing Specimen Questions is also obtainable without charge.

(5) Inquiries are being made at a number of universities and colleges of further education with a view to the provision of courses to study towards the certificate.

(Note. It is proposed that The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland will participate jointly in the examination. Such participation is, however, subject to the necessary approval being obtained by that Institute. Members of the Irish Institute will be notified of further details if and when the necessary Charter and bye-law amendments have been approved).

Joint Committee for National Awards in Business Studies

The Council appointed Mr R. P. Matthews, B.COM., F.C.A., a member of its Education Committee, as the representative of the Institute on the Joint Committee for National Awards in Business Studies in place of the late Mr P. F. Carpenter, F.C.A.

Registration of Articles

The Secretary reported the registration of 167 articles of clerkship during January 1965.

Admission to Membership

The following was admitted to membership of the Institute:

Holtom, Terence Dudley, B.SC.(ECON.), A.C.A., *a*1965; 62 Chepstow Villas, London W11.

Fellowship

The Council acceded to applications from fifteen associates to become fellows under clause 6 of the supplemental Royal Charter.

–we pay ours by CREDIT TRANSFER'

Life is simpler for all concerned now that our weekly-paid staff have agreed to accept payment through the bank. For them, it means less likelihood of loss. For our accounts department, it means just one cheque, to cover the whole payment—thanks to Credit Transfers.

HOW CREDIT TRANSFERS CAN HELP YOU PAY THE WAGES

Your accounts department makes out a Credit Transfer slip payable to each staff member through his or her bank. These are listed and totalled, and one cheque is made out. You then send this one cheque, with the list and the Credit Transfers, to your own bank—who will then do the rest by sending out the various Credit Transfers to the banks concerned. The movement of large amounts of cash is avoided and clerical man-hours savings are immense. Exactly the same principle —and benefit—applies in the case of salary payments, of course.

the ADAPTABLE EDUCATIONAL POLICY

This policy meets the needs of parents in a number of ways.

It provides the means of building up an educational fund over a period of years by way of a 'With Profits' endowment assurance. The compound interim bonus on with-profit policies in force before January 1st, 1963, and becoming claims after March 1st, 1964, is now 60*s per cent per annum (including a special bonus of 7*s per cent). Policies effected after January 1st, 1963, will rank for interim bonus of 53s per cent per annum.

Flexibility is ensured by the inclusion of a guaranteed option, available at the end of the endowment term, to substitute for the sum assured and bonuses then payable an equivalent annual instalment to be paid over the term of years most suited to the child's requirements, whether for school, university or professional training.

In the event of the parent's death before the sum assured becomes payable, the premium payments cease, and to assist in the maintenance of the child, an income, free of tax, is payable until the payment of the sum assured falls due.

May we send you our leaflet, full of useful information about this policy?

Sheffield Chartered Accountants' Annual Dinner

MORE than four hundred members and guests attended the annual dinner of the Sheffield and District Society of Chartered Accountants, held at the Cutlers' Hall, Sheffield, on Thursday of last week – some travelling from distant parts of the country despite the heavy snow in most areas.

Mr Richard Otley, F.C.A., a director of Stewarts and Lloyds Ltd, proposing the toast of 'The City and Trades of Sheffield', said he was a chartered accountant who did not practise and a steel-maker who did not make steel in Sheffield. But his parents and their parents were born in the city.

Regarding steel nationalization, he believed customers would travel to do their 'shopping' elsewhere, as the result of political rather than economic considerations. It could only work if it was productive. Firms had to plan capacity. Nationalization had been operated with hardship to millions of Russians, but he thought they should remember that conditions in Russia, and, indeed, America, were different from those in this country. Those two great nations were substantially self-supporting, while Britain relied on exports as a trading nation, and in that respect Sheffield had done handsomely.

It was necessary, he said, to plan the economy to produce what overseas customers wanted to buy. But those who said the steel trade was not 'with it' were wrong. It was essential that hardship, as during the industrial revolution, did not return for workpeople, nevertheless there must be a greater realization that they must do away with restrictive practices, and industry would then go forward together. The steel trade, he added, should not have the strait jacket of nationalization.

Proud Record

The Lord Mayor of Sheffield, Alderman Albert Smith, J.P., responding, said that people in the city were proud of Sheffield's industries. Over the past fifty years, the city had fulfilled a remarkable promise. The local authority had rendered service of which they could be justly proud, while industries had made remarkable strides and developments, and had achieved not only local, but national and international favour. Industry had the ability and know-how, but it must also be able to guarantee delivery dates. Accountants, he said, could assist their friends in industry.

Proposing the toast of 'The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales', Mr J. R. A. Bull, Master Cutler of Sheffield, said that chartered accountants were professional people who had served their articles and had passed their examinations, and had been brought up in conditions of integrity and ethics. He believed that many business people, too, were brought up in the same way – 'it was one of the good things of this country'.

He added that what accountants really needed was less taxation work and more simplification. Accountants wanted to help industry on the financial and management side in getting more efficient production and management and so much time spent on taxation work was unrewarding.

Mr W. Guy Densem F.C.A., President of the Institute, said thanks were due to the Secretary of the Society for the fine organization of the dinner.

He went on to say that accountants were able to do more and more for industry and the value of this was appreciated. What could be done to feed the necessary information to management was something which, unfortunately, was not fully realized.

Even in the dim ages of forty years ago, said Mr Densem, practitioners had their problems and rewards were low. That was one of the troubles of the profession and the cause of the drain of members to industry. A lot of practitioners found themselves in that difficulty.

Place of the Computer

The President said that it had been interesting to read in the last two or three days that the Government was to play a part in developing the computer industry. The computer, quite obviously, was something which was going to be of increasing importance to industry in rapidly giving information which management required to reach decisions quickly and also for long-term problems. The Institute, he said, would endeavour to keep members informed and also to increase details on what could be done by computers, and the courses on the subject would be continued and could be attended with advantage by members.

Welcoming the guests, Mr H. L. Watson, F.C.A., President of the Society, said he must mention the support received from guests south of the border, and also extended a warm welcome to the Duke of Devonshire.

He was sure that Mr Densem was having a very full and rewarding year of office. He had been talking with local articled clerks regarding their education and in this connection tribute should be paid to the Sheffield College of Technology. They had been most helpful to the subcommittee and were starting a course for Intermediate and Final students.

He might be old-fashioned, but he was pleased with the thought that correspondence courses continued to form part of the local articled clerks' education. This involved personal application and sacrifice.

Mr W. R. Jenkinson, F.C.A. Vice-President, proposed a toast to the President, Mr Watson, who came from Chesterfield, where he had been in practice for twenty-seven years. But he regarded Sheffield as a second home, and served his articles there. He had done everything which a good President should do. They had enjoyed the benefit of his friendly counsel.

Tribute was paid to Mr E. E. Vessey, F.C.A., Secretary of the dinner subcommittee, for the excellent arrangements.

CONTRACT AND DAMAGES
Practical Problems

Question

S. Claptrap contracted with Gripe & Co, builders, that they should build him a factory for £15,000. It was agreed that the building would be completed by May 31st, and that Gripe would pay Claptrap £100 for every day by which completion was delayed.

Soon after the contract was made Claptrap obtained a large Government order worth £8,000 in profit. This could only be fulfilled provided the factory was completed by May 31st. He telephoned Gripe & Co and told them of the position and Gripe's assured him that the building would definitely be ready on that date.

The building was not ready until June 8th and Claptrap lost the Government contract.

He claimed damages of £8,800 against Gripe's, being £8,000 loss of profit plus £100 per day for eight days.

Solution

Relevant cases:

(a) Cellulose Acetate Silk Co Ltd v. Widnes Foundry Ltd (1933).

(b) Hadby v. Saxendale (1854).

(c) Victoria Laundry (Windsor) Ltd v. Newman Industries (1949).

Problems

(1) Is Claptrap entitled to £8,000?

Case (b) decided that damages must relate to consequences that would naturally flow from breach, or would be supposed to be in the minds of the parties to the contract. This could amount to normal loss of profit. The question is, was the Government contract in the normal course of business or something unusual? If the latter, then no claim for loss of profits would be upheld (case (c)). Does the telephone call alter the position? Probably not, as Gripe's assurance was no fresh contract, there being no additional consideration.

(2) Is Claptrap entitled to £800?

This depends on whether the Court considers the £100 per day to be a penalty or liquidated damages (i.e. a genuine attempt to estimate possible losses). The Court will not enforce penalty clauses and Claptrap's claim would then be restricted to (1).

However, the Court in this case may well follow case (a) where it was assumed that a similar 'demurrage' clause was neither a penalty nor an attempt to assess possible loss but a limitation of liability on the part of the builder agreed to by the plaintiff. The case in question is fairly similar and it is probable that Claptrap's claim will be limited to £800.

Question

Flood received a cargo of melons from Italy. He took them to well-known fruit and vegetable dealers, Flapp & Co, asking them to sell the melons on his behalf for commission of 5 per cent on sale proceeds. On no account were they to be sold for less than £400 the lot.

Flapp & Co had difficulty in finding a customer, and noting that the melons showed signs of deteriorating they eventually sold them all to a jam factory for £250.

Flood, hearing of the sale, claimed:

(a) that the contract was void and that he could recover the melons;

(b) that Flapp & Co must account to him for £250 proceeds of sale and £150 by way of damages without any deduction for commission.

Flapp & Co counter-claimed that they were acting as agents of necessity and, further, that they were entitled to commission on the full £400 originally agreed.

Solution

(1) Flapp & Co appear to be factors, in which case they are assumed to have the right to sell goods in their possession. The jam factory would therefore get a good title, and Flood would be unable to recover the melons.

(2) Flapp & Co claim to have acted as agents of necessity. This is only allowable if an agency already exists and they could not communicate with the owner and obtain further instructions. If Flapp could not get in touch with Flood, they were probably justified in disposing of the melons at the best price. In such case Flood will probably not obtain the damages of £150. On the other hand, Flapp will probably not obtain commission on £400 but only on the sale proceeds of £250. The position is, however, arguable.

MANCHESTER CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS' STUDENTS' SOCIETY DINNER

THE annual dinner of The Manchester Chartered Accountants' Students' Society was held at the Midland Hotel, Manchester, on Thursday of last week, and was attended by 230 members and guests.

Judge J. R. D. Crichton, Q.C., Recorder of Manchester, in proposing the toast of 'The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales', said everyone realized the debt that was owed, in these days of complexity, to the professional services of chartered accountants. 'It was right and proper that our gratitude should from time to time be publicly expressed to them.'

Chartered accountants, he said, were valued in this commercialized world not only in auditing accounts, but in telling people how to keep their accounts in such a way that in any given situation they could be easily clarified.

They were also greatly concerned with tax avoidance (not tax evasion, he stressed) and it was pleasing to see that companies were only too ready to co-opt chartered accountants on their boards to deal with taxation problems, and bring more efficiency to their accountancy systems.

He believed the greatest threat to the accountancy profession was the computer, but he had every confidence that this challenge could be met, otherwise, of course, they would have to bear in mind the saying 'If you cannot beat them, join them'.

Mr W. W. Fea, B.A., F.C.A., a member of the Council of the Institute, in responding, said the profession was proud of two things – analytical ability, and presentation of a true and fair view.

Education and Training

Referring to education, he said that a very much greater interest was being taken in the training of articled clerks, and added that educational facilities were being continued through the Certificate of Management Information and the new electronic data processing courses, in additon to the long-standing summer courses.

Mr R. B. Stoker, deputy managing director of Manchester Liners Ltd, proposed the toast of 'The Manchester Chartered Accountants' Students' Society', and Mr R. Hayton, A.C.A., President of the Society, responded.

Mr Hayton referred to Mr J. A. Porter, a Vice-President and life member of the Society, who, although he had retired to St Ives, Cornwall, still wanted to receive the minutes of the students' meetings. It was a great thing, said Mr Hayton, that a man who had retired after reaching the top continued to take an interest in the students of today.

Since 1950, continued the President, the Society had grown considerably. There were 761 members then, and today there were over one thousand five hundred – part of the increase was due to integration, but there had been a large annual increase in membership as well.

Referring to current events, he said an ad hoc committee had been formed to consider the aims and activities of the Students' Society. A magazine section had been introduced and the Society's library was being reorganized to give students a most up-to-date and comprehensive selection of reference books.

Mr E. K. Richardson, B.SC.(ECON.), honorary treasurer of the Society, proposed a toast to 'The Guests' and in reply Mr J. G. Davies, H.M. Principal Inspector of Taxes, said he had served in Manchester for about ten years, and although a Welshman he now considered himself very nearly a true Mancunian.

LONDON STUDENTS' PRESIDENT'S MEETING

AT the recent President's Meeting of The Chartered Accountant Students' Society of London held in Guildhall, Sir Harold Howitt, G.B.E., D.S.O., M.C., D.C.L., LL.B., F.C.A., a past President of the Institute and a past President of the Students' Society, addressed members on 'The chartered accountant, past and future'.

Sir Harold Howitt

Sir Harold said that he wished to look at events that had happened in the first half of the twentieth century – with which he had been principally associated – and then with the second half of the century, of which fifteen years had already passed, in which the student members present would be practising as accountants.

Commenting on the election of the Society's first lady chairman, Miss E. A. Hattley, Sir Harold said that when he first came to the City there was not a lady in the accountancy profession, in fact, the principals in those days would have been horrified at a lady daring to come into a professional office. He added that they were probably turning in their graves now at the thought of it, but how wrong they were.

Sir Harold went on to comment on the many young people coming to the United Kingdom from the emergent countries in order to learn a profession and said that there was an enormous difference between the approach to the development of the overseas territories in the first fifty years of the century and that of the present time. Britain, he said, was still responsible for about a quarter of the world's population, about a quarter of the world's surface and about a quarter of the world's trade, and it was a tremendous privilege to have young people here from overseas for their professional training. He expressed the hope that when the many who were learning accountancy returned to their countries they would feel they had enjoyed their stay and had derived great benefit from the experience.

The first half of the century, said Sir Harold, had been bedevilled by war but he hoped and honestly believed that despite all the talk about 'the bomb', the second half of the twentieth century would see the end of predetermined war. This he felt would be the big difference between the first fifty years and the second fifty years.

Another major difference, said Sir Harold, was the removal of poverty as a social problem. When he started his business career there was destitution, poverty and distress in many parts of Britain, but now there was no real poverty, and if there was, there were means of overcoming it. Nevertheless, there was still ample opportunity for helping the old and the young, and he expressed the hope that students would remember this and would reject the philosophy 'I'm alright-Jack', as in order to be a good chartered accountant it was necessary to be a good citizen.

In conclusion, Sir Harold said:

'I hope you are getting a certain amount of fun out of being articled clerks, as well as the hard work and drudgery which I know you have. I hope also that you enjoy the privilege that you get in being able to walk into a client's office and ask him for his private books; see what he is making or losing; what his salary is, and all that kind of thing. It is a tremendous privilege, and like all other privileges, they carry corollaries, and the corollary in this case is that it puts on you a most stringent obligation to treat his affairs with complete tact; to realize what it means for him to have to show all these facts to a young man. It also puts on you the need for strict and absolute confidence.'

Earlier, Mr E. F. G. Whinney, M.A., F.C.A., President of the Society, who presided over the meeting, introduced the Lord Mayor, Alderman Sir James Miller, who welcomed the members of the Society to Guildhall and spoke of the history of Guildhall over the past 600 hundred years as a centre of civic administration for the City of London.

INDUSTRIAL VISIT OF HULL CHARTERED ACCOUNTANT STUDENTS

MEMBERS of The Chartered Accountants' Students' Society of Kingston upon Hull, with their Chairman, Mr I. R. Bryce, A.C.A., recently toured the offices of Ideal Standard Ltd, Hull, where they had explained to them the complexity of detail handled by the costing department in preparing production and cost figures in the manufacture of bathroom equipment as well as other associated accounting features. Afterwards, as shown in our picture below, they visited the company's plant where a wide range of porcelain enamelled baths are produced.

YORK CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS' DINNER

The first annual dinner of the newly-formed York Branch of the Leeds, Bradford & District Society of Chartered Accountants was held on Friday of last week. The Branch Chairman, Mr W. F. Outhwaite, F.C.A., who presided, said that the Branch already had a hundred members. He suggested that a chair in accountancy should be established at York University.

Proposing the toast of the Institute, Mr Charles Longbottom, M.P. for York, said that it was time something was done about the simplification of taxation. This was a task which would obviously take some time, but it would be time well spent for the tax laws were in 'a disgraceful state'. Income tax and surtax, he said, should be assimilated with a single graduated tax, and company taxation should be put on a firm basis. The proposed corporation tax might provide this – in any event, it should try to bring more streamlining into company taxation.

Mr Longbottom also appealed for more simplicity in the published accounts of companies.

The Lord Mayor of York, Councillor S. Palphramand, attended the dinner and replied to the toast of the guests, proposed by Mr Outhwaite.

NORTH LONDON DISCUSSION GROUP

The next meeting of the North London Discussion Group of Chartered Accountants will take place at the Russell Hotel, London WC2 next Wednesday at 6.15 for 6.30 p.m., when Mr G. D. Plaister, senior auditor, Exchequer and Audit Department, will speak on 'The Auditor-General's Department'.

Members are asked to note that the April meeting will take place on April 14th, and not on April 21st.

ENGLISH GOLF UNION

Chartered Accountant President-elect

Mr W. J. Milburn, F.C.A., of Penrith, is the new President-elect of the English Golf Union; he will take office in 1966. Admitted to membership of the Institute in 1924, Mr Milburn is senior partner in the firm of Milburn & Dawson, Chartered Accountants, of Penrith and Carlisle. He will be the first chartered accountant to become President of the English Golf Union.

CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS' HOCKEY CLUB

Chartered Accountants 1
Oxford University Occasionals 0

Taking an afternoon away from the uncertainties of the corporation tax, the Chartered Accountants' Hockey Club achieved a notable victory against Oxford University Occasionals, inasmuch that it represented the first win they have managed to register against these youthful opponents, in a match played on February 10th at Keble College ground, Oxford. Threlfall was the mainspring of the forward line with his precision passing and it was fitting that he should score the winning goal with a direct shot at a long corner. In defence, the rearguard of Sinnott, Viney and Hubble played efficiently and the halves covered well on occasion to divert dangerous situations.

Chartered Accountants' H.C. Team:
C. Sinnott (Blackheath), R. Hubble (Oxford Hawks), M. Hodder (Berkhamsted), A. Bradley (Suffolk Exiles), A. Hines (Suffolk Exiles), J. Chaplin (Suffolk Exiles), M. Viney (Berkhamsted), R. Burgess (Achilles), P. Clarke (Blackheath) (Capt.), S. Schanschieff (Southgate), J. Threlfall (Blackheath).

In an effort to attract attention to the club and to increase its membership a miniature poster on which the wording 'Are you a member of the Chartered Accountants' Hockey Club?' is superimposed on a diagram of a hockey pitch has been circulated to a number of professional firms. Members of the Institute and articled clerks interested in joining the club should apply to the honorary secretary, Mr A. J. Hines, Priory Gate, Sudbury, Suffolk, telephone (daytime) Monarch 6526.

INSURANCE STATISTICS

Insurance Business – a summary of accounts and statements deposited with the Board of Trade during the year ended December 31st, 1963, was published last week (H.M.S.O. Price £1). This is a completely remodelled successor to Summary of Statements of Insurance Business, which was published annually between 1949 and 1962.

Tables and text have been re-designed to provide greater clarity and ease of access to the information presented. One of the most interesting features is the provision, for the first time, of an introductory text.

Summaries of balance sheets, profit and loss accounts and revenue accounts for all classes of insurance business are also given, together with statements of new life assurance business and of policies in force for life assurance and bond investment business.

In three volumes

An Introduction to Cost Accountancy

Important new printings covering all cost accountancy

by R. WARWICK DOBSON,
C.A., F.C.W.A.
Silver Medallist of the Institute of Cost and Works Accountants

Vol. I – COSTING AND COST CONTROL (Revised First Edition)

This volume is devoted entirely to cost ascertainment and cost control. It deals with the historical, standard and marginal costing techniques and with uniform costing, budgetary control, and cost improvement. It describes in addition to the methods of evaluating the factors of production, the methods of analysing and classifying costs for control purposes. It concentrates on the essentials by leaving to other volumes the forms and appliances used in recording cost data.

'. . . The books can be thoroughly recommended, not only to the student of cost accountancy but also to the accountant in industry. . . .' – Times Review of Industry.

Price 37s 6d net.

Vol. II – THE ELEMENTS OF COST ACCOUNTING (Second Edition)

Attention is directed in this volume to the fundamentals of the mechanics of cost accounting – the organization of cost accounting departments, the machines and appliances which may be used (with many illustrations), the design of the forms on which records are made, and the construction of procedure records and manuals of instruction. Two chapters are devoted to cost book-keeping and an example of integral accounts. The fundamentals of preparation and the presentation of cost information to management and the audit of costs are the subjects of the remaining chapters.

'. . . The three volumes taken together give the reader a detailed exposition of a very important subject, and the author is justified in claiming that his work is fuller than any previously published in this country. . . .' – The Engineer.

Price 37s 6d net.

Vol. III – COST RECORDING AND PRESENTATION (Reprinted First Edition)

The many methods by which the process of cost accounting is in practice carried out are profusely illustrated and described. Short-cut methods and up-to-date practices are presented to the reader. Each chapter is devoted to one aspect such as materials accounting, wages accounting, cost centre accounting, standard cost accounting, etc. At the same time, each chapter deals with the basic records required, the book-keeping entries involved, and form of presentation of information concerning the particular aspect dealt with in the chapter. By dealing with the details of the cost accounting mechanism in a separate volume, more illustrations have been provided than could otherwise have been possible.

'. . . Now that the work can be read in its entirety, it may be said without qualification that the author has fairly and squarely succeeded in his objective and that he has produced a textbook of real and lasting value to future generations of costing students.– The Accountant.

Saving in perspective

On any view, freedom from fluctuations is of prime importance to the personal saver. An Abbey National shareholding offers this—and much besides. Shares that hold their price, the certainty of a reasonable return (made even more attractive because Abbey National pay the income tax) and withdrawal facilities that are the nearest thing possible to complete liquidity—these features combine stability, yield and flexibility in a way that meets the needs of many. As an accumulating account for the prudent saver, an income-booster for the small investor, or a stabilising factor in larger portfolios, Abbey National is equally advisable—and equally to be advised. We shall be pleased to give you full information on our facilities for investment.

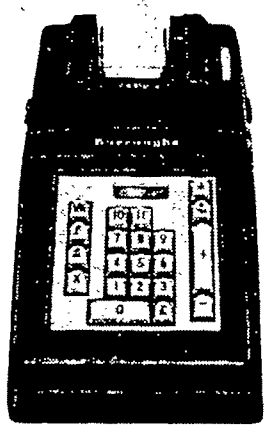
If you could count... 30% faster you'd be a Burroughs J600!

Faster than what?

Faster than any other adding machine.



Would I subtract and multiply as fast too?

Of course—and you would be compact, portable, quiet and dependable to operate!

I see . . . Ledgers, accounts and invoices are in good hands with Burroughs J600 then.

Yes. Try its feather-touch key action. See its bright, durable, colour-fast casing . . .

A LEADING FIRM of chartered accountants with an international practice has vacancies for young chartered accountants, especially newly-qualified men, who have ability and personality to progress rapidly to responsible work. Vacancies exist in London and at offices in the Midlands and the North.

The appointments offer opportunities to gain the best experience of most branches of professional work and should be attractive to young men who believe that the finest positions in the profession and in industry go to those who broaden their experience in the years immediately following qualification. There will be opportunities to transfer abroad and travel on short-term assignments to many parts of the world. These vacancies arise through the continued expansion of the firm's practice and the prospects for advancement within the firm are unusually good. For those who wish later to enter industry or commerce it is the firm's policy to make introductions where possible to first-class openings. – Applications should give full relevant information and be sent in confidence to Box AL7935.

AN INTRODUCTION to an interesting well-paid permanent office post (or temporary assignment) is waiting for you if you register with the Imperial (world famous) Agency. – Write or call personally at 36/38 Dean Street, Shaftesbury Avenue, London W1, or phone to our staff consultant GERrard 6384 or 7074. Our service is absolutely free of charge to staff.

ANY TIME from 10 to 4 (other times by telephone appointment) you can consult our appointment specialists entirely free of charge. Introductions to selected accountancy, clerical, secretarial and all other temporary and permanent office posts available. – Call J. W. Bedford Agency, First floor, 11 Ludgate Hill, EC4. 'In the shadow of St Paul's Cathedral'. (Telephone CIT. 2154/3370).

A QUALIFIED ACCOUNTANT is required as assistant to a partner in a City firm of chartered accountants. Should be keen to broaden his experience with a firm which believes that its clients are entitled to comprehensive and up-to-date service. Practice mainly in the London area. Variety of work in engineering, finance, wholesale and retail trade, plantations, professional firms, personal tax and trusts, etc. – Box AQ7754.

A SENIOR AUDIT CLERK, qualified or unqualified, required by Hampshire accountants. Experience with incomplete records necessary. Commencing salary dependent upon experience. The firm is expanding and there are good prospects for a qualified person. – Please write stating age, experience and salary required to Box AS5478.

When it doesn't pay to remain private

A stage is reached in the progress of many important private companies, when desirable growth, to continue expansion and meet competition, can no longer be financed solely from the company's own resources and those of the private owners. At this point, Kleinwort, Benson can advise upon and assist with raising necessary outside finance. At a still later stage a public flotation, bringing in the general investing public, can be the right answer. As one of the leading issuing houses, Kleinwort, Benson advises on means by which the needs of these different stages and all subsequent stages can be met.

The versatility of NCR accounting machines means they're put to work not only in book-keeping, but everywhere that figures are used to produce business information economically and on time.

An NCR accounting machine provides a complete data processing system for both large and small firms—fast, accurate record-keeping combined with the simultaneous preparation of analyses, summaries and exception reports. And when you decide to 'go electronic', in the near or distant future, the same machine can be equipped to translate information into the language of computers. Its work is automatically controlled by a unique, interchangeable 'programme bar' that has 'memorised' a complete sequence of operations. This means that it can be switched from one application to another in seconds. Obviously it is an all-purpose machine that need never lie idle—a machine, moreover, that can be operated by anyone after a few hours' instruction.

Add to all this NCR's vast business-systems 'know-how'. Here is your guarantee (when you invest in a British-built NCR 31, 32 or 33 accounting machine) that you'll get the highest possible return in labour economy and better business information.

Talk to an NCR Representative and between you start new ideas working in your business.

Both at home and abroad NCR supplies British-built machines that will keep you ahead of your competitors! A unique range of business equipment includes Adding and Accounting Machines, Cash Registers, Input Preparation Equipment, and British-built Electronic Computers (in collaboration with Elliott-Automation Ltd). In planning your firm's future growth you need NCR equipment combined with NCR 'know-how'. Start that planning now. Talk to NCR.

Forming New Companies

THE Jenkins Committee, appointed over five years ago to review and report upon the provisions and working of the Companies Act, 1948, referred in its report (now lying on the shelves of some Government office) to the evidence given by the Board of Trade of 'the irresponsible multiplication of companies'. The Board of Trade had also referred to the dangers of abuse through the incorporation with limited liability of very small, under-capitalized businesses, and to the fact that nowadays incorporation is frequently used as a cheap means of protecting a name and for various purposes other than carrying on a business in association with others. The recommendations of the Committee on this topic were not exactly startling. As to discouraging registration by making it expensive, the Committee proposed a modest £25 fee on incorporation, with an annual fee of £5 in place of existing fees for the registration of documents. Assuming that the Government ever reach the stage of implementing the report, it does not seem that the £25 fee will make much difference.

The most recent illustration of the difficulties which can be caused by easy company incorporation is that provided by the litigation in Stony Stanton Supplies (Coventry) Ltd v. Midland Bank Ltd, which was decided in the Court of Appeal on March 9th. The story begins in 1960 when a wholesale grocery business was being carried on but was on the market. A Mr Fox proposed to the owners that he should form a company which would buy the business for £12,000. As Mr Fox was, in fact, an undischarged bankrupt the difficulties in the way of his buying the business himself are obvious. He went to company registration agents and made use of them to form a company which eventually had the name Stony Stanton Supplies (Coventry) Ltd. That company was registered in May 1960 with a nominal capital of £100 and an issued capital of £2. The two issued shares were issued to two persons who subscribed the memorandum of association and appointed themselves as the first directors. They were the two persons who, according to THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS, as reported in The Times of March 10th, ran the company registration business. His lordship said that that was all that was ever done with, or authorized by, this company. Mr Fox, the undischarged bankrupt, had no authority from the company to do anything.

What Mr Fox actually did was to use its name in his negotiations with the owners of the grocery business and before any contract was signed for the purchase of that business. On July 4th, Mr Fox put in valuers, took over the running of the business, and set it up in the name of the new company. Then he went along to the bank with the owner and told the bank that the business was being taken over by the new company. Since Mr Fox was being introduced by an old and respected client, the bank manager gave to Mr Fox the forms necessary for opening an account and a mandate for signing cheques. Mr Fox returned to the bank later with the forms apparently signed by the chairman and secretary of the company; he opened an account in the company's name and signed the mandate form. In fact, the forms had been forged by Mr Fox. Moneys came in from the business, were diverted into this account, and drawn out of it on cheques all of which were forged by Mr Fox. Some of these cheques were made in favour of genuine creditors, but some were in favour of Mr Fox's other companies.

The business got into such a bad way that in August 1964 the former owners of the business took out a petition to wind-up the company, based on written agreements dated July 4th, 1960, for the sale of the business, which agreements were also forged. The company was put into liquidation and the liquidator decided to bring an action against the bank claiming that those cheques honoured by the bank in favour of Fox's other companies represented moneys received to the use of the company, and in the alternative that the bank owed the company a duty to take reasonable care and had failed in that duty. It was argued on behalf of the company that as the agreement to purchase the business was in the company's name, the company could ratify it, and that this cured the want of title in the company to the moneys coming in from the business. However, ratification had not been pleaded. In so far as there was a written agreement it was a forgery, and a company could not ratify a forged agreement. The decision of Mr Justice McNair in favour of the bank was upheld.

Lord Justice Danckwerts said that though the company was registered in the companies register, it had no real or effective existence at all. Fox had merely used the company's name to cover his operations. The company never had any property in the money paid into the business. The moneys paid into the bank were never the company's moneys, there was never any banker-customer relationship between the bank and the company, and the bank owed no duty to the company which the bank had failed to carry out.

There is no doubt that the Companies Act, 1948, confers great benefits on individuals who are minded to form companies, not merely in the matter of enabling them to trade with limited liability, but also for a variety of other matters, not least of which is the avoidance or mitigation of taxation. At the same time, the degree of ignorance as to the precise procedure to be followed is very considerable, not only among laymen but among professional men, too. Too often essential steps are left out of schemes which involve the use of companies and have a tax advantage in view. The simple oversight of not holding a general or a board meeting and formally passing some simple resolutions can lead to difficulties out of all proportion to the trouble of calling and holding such meetings. A common difficulty arises from the incorporation of a company in order to take over a business, without the necessary steps being taken to see that the company does, in fact, take over the business on the date which is the optimum date for tax purposes. Subsequently it is not surprising if the Inland Revenue argue for a date which is more favourable to them. Even if the argument ultimately fails, a great deal of time and money may be wasted. If the argument succeeds, it can be disastrous for the taxpayer. Of course, the intended date of transfer may prove to be disadvantageous, in which case the omission to take formal steps such as holding a board meeting or executing a sale agreement may prove to be beneficial after all. But the counsel of perfection is to examine the whole scheme with great care, to fix on the optimum dates, and to see that such things as have to be done on the appropriate days are not only done but are manifestly seen to have been done.

One must remember one of the felicitous dicta of Rowlatt, J., that 'it is beyond the power of the gods . . . to alter the past' (Faraday, Rodgers & Eller v. Carter (6 A.T.C. 198).

In Todd v. Jones Brothers Ltd (9 A.T.C. 197) the company unsuccessfully sought to establish that its de facto succession to a business occurred in the tax year preceding that in which the formal contract was executed. The opposite result followed in Aeraspray Associated Ltd v. Woods (1964 T.R. 385) where the company argued in vain that it did not take over a business until after April 6th, 1953. The Commissioners inferred from the facts that there was a de facto succession before that date.

Scottish Emphasis on Education

IF, as HERBERT SPENCER suggested, education has for its object the formation of character, the Scottish chartered accountant has every opportunity of projecting a formidable image. The emphasis of the report of the Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland, to be formally presented to the annual general meeting of the members of the Institute on April 2nd, is clearly on educative influences both before and after qualifying. Following upon the publication of the Robbins Report last year, the Council formed a committee to consider and report on every aspect of recruitment and training and to review the whole range of professional knowledge, both common and specialized, to be associated with the syllabus. This committee, now in action, finds its task so far-reaching that an early report is unlikely.

Meanwhile, the tutorial facilities currently in force continue to work to good effect judging by the 1964 examination statistics. The percentage pass in Part I (A and B) of the Institute's examination was over ninety. That for Part II was eighty-two and for Part III (A) seventy-eight. These were all better than the corresponding ratios for 1963. Only in the tough practical papers which comprise Parts IV and V was there a slight recession, although the actual percentages, fifty-seven and sixty-four respectively, were satisfactory in themselves. The number of indentures registered in 1964 was 452, only one fewer than in the previous year. The Glasgow area continues to supply considerably more than half of the Institute's apprentices.

The arrangements for post-qualification study provided by the Institute appear to become more comprehensive each year. In 1964, a series of part-time courses in electronic data processing, with particular emphasis on programming, was held in five centres. These were followed up by an intensive residential course at Dunblane. At the end of the year, a course in management accounting was held by arrangement with the new University of Strathclyde. All this, together with the summer school at St Andrews in September and meetings of discussion groups organized by the six local committees, indicates that a high degree of corporate activity exists among members.

On a parallel plane, the research programme begun by the Institute in 1962 continues to gain momentum. During the year, four projects were initiated by the Research and Publications Committee. Work continues on the three inaugurated in 1963. In addition, the committee considered and reported on specific matters referred to it by the Council. In other fields the Taxation Committee made representations to the Board of Inland Revenue and the CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER on fiscal matters, the Company Law Committee made known its views to the Board of Trade on the contents of the next Companies Bill and a special committee began a review of bankruptcy procedure in Scotland.

The Council states that the response to the survey made during the year to ascertain the trend of partners' earnings, staff salaries and fee levels was disappointingly small. This reticence is to be regretted on two counts. First, it compares unfavourably with the recent efforts made by the members of the English Institute in producing their notable Practitioner Enquiry; secondly, a greater response would have supplied data of much value to the growing number of firms with offices both in Scotland and in England in which differing levels of fees and costs can constitute serious problems of equation.

Among the publications mentioned by the Council is a novel loose-leaf book (referred to in a note elsewhere in this issue) demonstrating some of the legal documents likely to be met with in professional life. The examples are woven round the career of a fictitious commercial character and are said to add 'concrete illustration and interest' to the subject-matter of the university law classes.

The Institute's finances appear to be in a healthy state, showing a surplus of £6,478 for the year on a record gross income of £123,015; but it is pointed out that, with educational and other commitments, the 1965 budget 'indicates the possibility of a deficit'. Accordingly, a proposal to increase members' subscriptions as from the beginning of 1967 may be forthcoming at the next annual general meeting but one.

Not so Much a Standard

CONTRIBUTED

MAJOR wars play havoc with human institutions. Financial institutions are perhaps amongst the most sensitive, the international gold standard being no exception. It is possible that but for the two world wars, Britain would still be on the gold standard as it existed, under the provisions of the Gold Standard Act of 1925, between 1925 and September 1931. The gold sovereign and the half-sovereign of the pre-1914 gold currency standard would by then have probably given place to bank-notes of the same denominations, and the same values in terms of gold.

It has been argued that the gold standard fell into disrepute in the late twenties, not because of any defect in the mechanism of the gold standard so much as in the way it was operated – not so much the fault of the vehicle as of the fellow behind the wheel. There is probably some truth in this. The leading economists of the day contended that we should have returned to the gold standard in 1925, not at the pre-1914 parity, but at a higher price of gold – not at £3 17*s* 10½*d* an ounce standard (or £4 5*s* an ounce fine), but at some appreciably higher price. A devaluation of the £ relative to its pre-1914 parity would have benefited the country and probably the trading world in general.

The Bank of England kept the sterling price of gold steady at £4 5*s* a fine ounce merely by offering to buy or sell the metal at that price in any quantity, subject to a legal minimum sale of 400 ounces. If gold price stability were all that the gold standard required, it could be said that the country is still on it.

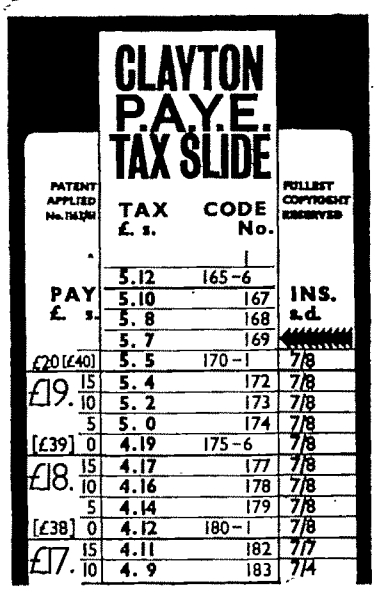
Exchange Equalization Fund Established

After the Bank of England suspended gold payments on September 21st, 1931, the £ found a new parity at about £7 1*s* 6*d* a fine ounce, which it slowly reached about the end of 1934. In the meantime, in 1932, the Exchange Equalization Fund was established and this largely took over from the Bank of England the task of keeping the £ on an even keel by buying and selling gold and foreign exchange in the open market. And then in 1933 the U.S. dollar got into difficulties, and its sterling value fell from $3.32 to the £ at the end of 1932 to $5.10 to the £ at the end of 1933; so that both sterling and the dollar had become 'floaters'.

Some measure of stability was reached by the end of 1934, when the sterling price of gold in London became about £7 1*s* 6*d* a fine ounce, and the dollar price of sterling about $4.92 to the £, at which figures they remained for some years. In 1939, before September, the dollar exchange rate stood at its old parity, near enough, at $4.68 to the £, and the sterling price of gold at £7 18*s* 6*d* a fine ounce, so that both sterling and the U.S. dollar had become devalued in terms of gold by as much as 42½ per cent.

Currency Note Issue Levels

Before the establishment of the Exchange Equalization Fund, the Bank of England performed the function of keeping the foreign exchange value of sterling steady, not by direct intervention in the exchange market so much as by keeping the gold value of the £ steady. The sterling exchange value of any other currency based on gold would also be steady as a result. At that time Britain's gold reserve was held in the Bank's issue department, and the Bank used it as a cover for its note issue in excess of the statutory fiduciary issue of £260 million.[1] The Bank acquired gold when the sterling price of the metal on the bullion market tended to fall, and lost gold when the sterling price tended to rise. The bullion dealers were the active partners in these movements and so performed a valuable function. An acquisition of gold caused the Bank to increase the note issue, and a loss to decrease it.



In those days it was considered important that the currency note issue should rise and fall with increases or decreases in the gold held at the Bank, that is, with falls and rises in the sterling price of other gold-based currencies.

A rise in the note issue is inflationary and a fall deflationary, especially as Bank of England notes provide the base of the whole monetary and credit structure of the country's banking system. This rising and falling was part and parcel of the operation of the gold standard. It meant that when there was a debit balance of payments with other countries, gold from the Bank was shipped abroad, the note issue fell, causing deflation, a fall in costs, a reduction in imports and an increase in exports, until the balance between receipts and payments on overseas account had been restored.

The discipline imposed by the full-blooded gold standard on the country's economy was automatic. It tended to nip in the bud any trend towards inflation or deflation by reversing it. It kept the economy on an even keel.

It has been said that Britain is now on a gold exchange standard, but this is not so. A gold exchange standard is one operated by a country which uses the foreign exchange of gold standard countries as a cover for its note issue instead of gold. It has advantages over the pure gold standard in so far as the foreign exchange earns its keep, so to speak, in the form of interest, whereas gold bullion does not. Gold merely occupies valuable space and calls for expensive safe-keeping. The only time it can be said to earn its keep is when its world price rises, that is, when currencies are devalued in terms of gold. The gold exchange standard can be just as automatic in controlling the economy as the pure gold standard.

In spite of the establishment of the Exchange Equalization Fund in 1932, the Bank of England appeared to be operating the gold standard fully for at least a year or two before the outbreak of war in September 1939. In the last week of August 1939, the Bank held £263 million of gold against currency notes, the gold being valued at £7 18*s* 6*d* a fine ounce. The fiduciary issue at the same time amounted to £300 million. Early in September, the Bank's gold was transferred to the Exchange Equalization Fund, which revalued it at £8 8*s* a fine ounce; and at the same time the Bank's fiduciary issue was increased to £580 million.

More Sterling Difficulties

Sterling ran into difficulties again in 1949, and on September 18th the £ was devalued from $4.03 to the £ to $2.80, which has remained the parity rate ever since. At the same time the price of gold at the Bank of England was raised from £8 12*s* 3*d* a fine ounce to £12 8*s* 3*d*. Today's official price of gold, and the price prevailing in the London Bullion Market, is £12 10*s* a fine ounce; and in New York, the price is kept steady at $35 a fine ounce, to provide the exchange rate parity of 35/12.5 = $2.80 to the £.

As gold in London is maintained at a constant sterling price, it can be said that the British monetary system is still based on the gold standard. But it is not the old full-blooded gold standard. The U.K. now no longer has the automatic mechanism which was an important part of the old standard for controlling the economy. For instance, between December 1960 and September 1964, the country's gold reserve fell from £1,000 million to £822 million. Under the old standard this would have resulted in a fall in the Bank's note issue of £178 million, but in fact, the issue increased by as much as £369 million from £2,251 million to £2,620 million.

It could be argued that the automatic control of the economy by the mechanism of the gold standard is better, and certainly less arbitrary than the so-called stop-go strategy of the last ten or fifteen years: than raising and lowering purchase tax and the Bank rate, issuing directives to bank chairmen asking them to curtail loans and advances to the banks' customers, wage-freezes, surcharges on imports, and so on.

Control by Gold

There may be something in the argument – in the short period at any rate. A reduction in the note issue would have the effect of reducing bank credit, the home-market demand for goods and services, the volume of imports, and capital investment; and it would in consequence encourage employers to resist wage increases, and to reduce costs of production and distribution, thus tending to cause an increase in exports. It would therefore do away with the need for increases in the purchase tax, directives to the banks to curtail loans and advances, wage-freezes and the rest. The stop-go strategy as a deliberate act of policy would be quite unnecessary. The note issue would operate automatically and gradually and would not allow any tendency to inflation to develop into a crisis. Bank rate had for many years been used to assist the mechanism of the gold standard to keep the economy on an even keel: an increase in Bank rate raises the general level of interest rates and makes the withdrawal of currency notes from circulation easier by reducing the demand for bank loans.

All this, of course, is theory and may operate satisfactorily in the short period. But the present crisis is due to long period factors: the universal inflation which has existed for the last fifteen to twenty years. It is interesting to speculate on what might have happened if the old gold standard had operated in Britain. At first, production costs would have remained fairly constant while those in other countries would have risen. The country's competitive position in world markets would have improved and the consequential influx of gold would have resulted in an increase in the note issue. Then the world inflation would have enveloped the British economy, but only slowly, and if other countries had failed to take counter measures, the U.K.'s gold reserves would have continued to increase until it held a large proportion of the world's monetary gold. At the same time the country's costs would have risen and gone on rising, and eventually there would have been a measure of equilibrium in world trade, but not before other countries had been compelled to suspend gold payments, or to adopt a gold exchange standard with sterling as the cover for the note issue, or to devalue their currencies in terms of gold.

In the event, Britain has had the Keynesian economics in operation – in part at least. This is what Keynes himself said about the gold standard

> 'Never in history was there a method devised of such efficacy for setting each country's advantage at variance with its neighbours' as the international gold (or, formerly, silver) standard. For it made domestic prosperity dependent on a competitive pursuit of markets and a competitive appetite for the precious metals.[1]'

Gold is still the international standard of value; but its mechanism for the automatic control of the economy has gone, probably for ever. Economic growth, full employment, ever increasing productivity and prosperity, these are now the aims of monetary policy, not the amassing of gold.

Tax Planning for a Group of Companies

by J. P. HARDMAN, A.C.A.

'Every man is entitled to arrange his affairs so that his tax is less than it otherwise would be.'

(Lord Tomlin in C.I.R. v. Duke of Westminster, 14 A.T.C. 77; 19 T.C. 490).

COMPANY tax planning, which means simply the consideration and arrangement of a company's affairs, present and future, in such a way that the least amount of taxation is payable, has become of increasing importance in recent years. High rates of taxation and keener competition at home and abroad are the main causes of industry now regarding the taxation accountant not merely as one who agrees taxation liabilities on profits when earned, but as one who helps reduce or defer the ultimate tax burden on profits before they are earned. He has thus become of major importance as a member of the management team.

2. Many of the larger United Kingdom companies now employ their own taxation departments, especially where overseas interests are involved, but in other cases management is looking to the professional accountant for advice on tax planning. In this field the accountant in practice can be of considerable assistance to his client, especially in cases where the importance of considering the taxation aspect of transactions and decisions is not at present realized.

3. Tax planning denotes the legal reduction of tax liabilities; it does not include evasion by illegal means. However, transactions can be undertaken solely to obtain a tax advantage at the expense of the Inland Revenue, but which have no commercial object and do not involve illegal evasion of tax. Whether such a transaction should be undertaken depends on the particular circumstances, and a few such examples are commented upon later.

4. This article covers various aspects of tax planning for a typical group of manufacturing and selling companies, publicly owned in the United Kingdom. Group structure varies greatly, but it has been assumed that the group comprises a holding company controlling several subsidiary and sub-subsidiary companies, each manufacturing or selling particular types of products. The implications of foreign trading are considered from the standpoint of United Kingdom taxation only. As the group is publicly owned, the implications of family control, director control, surtax and estate duty have not been considered.

5. The article was prepared in the main before the proposals to replace income tax and profits tax by a corporation tax and the extension of the capital gains tax were announced. These proposals will, when enacted, necessitate a review of some of the established methods of tax planning, and this must be borne in mind when reading this article. In fact, if a group or other reorganization having tax advantages is planned in the coming months, it could well be advisable, if possible, not to proceed with the reorganization until the effects of the new legislation were known.

Degree of Parent Company Control over Subsidiaries

6. One hundred per cent control of a subsidiary is of considerable importance from a taxation point of view, and where a minority interest is prepared to sell, full consideration should be given to such acquisition, bearing in mind the taxation advantages, among others, which could flow therefrom.

7. The importance of complete control is seen where a loss is incurred which cannot be utilized other than by a subvention payment from another group company. For example, if a subsidiary which is less than 75 per cent owned by the group incurs a loss of £100,000 this cannot be offset against the profit of another group company, resulting in a loss of interest of £2,150 (at 4 per cent per annum net) in the first year alone on the tax otherwise deferred.

8. Furthermore, if the group owns between 75 and 100 per cent of the controlling interest in the subsidiary, then although the subsidiary can receive a subvention payment, the benefit of a part of the payment accrues to the minority shareholders alone and the prospect of immediate loss relief loses its attraction. Similarly, the minority shareholders could justifiably object if the company proposed to make a subvention payment, as this would constitute a diminution in the value of their underlying security.

9. For these reasons subvention payments to and by companies with minority shareholders are usually avoided, which may have detrimental effects on the finances of the group as a whole. It might be mentioned here, however, that it is sometimes possible to overcome this disadvantage by the utilization of a special class of shares held by the parent company on which a net dividend is paid equal to the subvention payment received by the subsidiary less the tax relief thereon.

10. If a subsidiary is more than 75 per cent owned, it is possible to group its results for profits tax purposes. This has now ceased to be of importance in most cases because of the introduction of subvention payments, although it will be advantageous in the case of a holding company obtaining relief for its management expenses against dividends from subsidiaries which are franked for profits tax. It will be interesting to see whether companies will be able to group their results for the purposes of the corporation tax, or whether subvention payments will still be necessary in order to recoup losses.

11. The holding of 90 per cent of the shares in a subsidiary has advantages from the standpoint of stamp duty when property is transferred between group companies (section 42, Finance Act, 1930).

12. Such transfers might involve the payment of short-term gains tax unless the relevant degree of control is at least 75 per cent, when the transaction will be exempt from this tax (paragraph 6 (2), Ninth Schedule, Finance Act, 1962).

13. If the group parent company were to acquire a new subsidiary in exchange for its own shares, it would be advisable to acquire, if possible, at least 90 per cent of the issued share capital of the company, as no stamp duty would then be payable either on the consideration for the acquisition or, if the parent company increased its nominal capital for the purpose of the acquisition, on such increase (section 55, Finance Act, 1927, as amended by section 31, Finance Act, 1928, and section 41, Finance Act, 1930). Although transfer stamp duty might otherwise be saved by the issue of renounceable allotment letters, it would still be advisable to obtain as high a degree of control as possible so that the disadvantages outlined above may be avoided. Furthermore, if 90 per cent of the share capital were acquired, it would be possible to compulsorily acquire the remaining 10 per cent (section 209, Companies Act, 1948), and so stand in the most favourable position from the standpoint of taxation.

Group Structure – How many Companies?

14. The more complex the group, the more painful becomes the headache of the tax planner. Some groups seem to delight in forming new companies to manufacture and/or market a new or improved product when an existing company could be used to more advantage. Although it is realized that in some circumstances the formation of a new company is essential, from a taxation standpoint a simple group structure consisting of as few companies as possible has the advantages mentioned below.

15. A group consisting of separate manufacturing and selling companies is under the disadvantage of paying tax on inter-company profits not realized outside the group. If manufacturing and selling is carried out in the same company, however, tax liability is deferred until goods are sold outside the group. This is also referred to in paragraph 34.

16. Where goods are transferred between group companies at artificially low prices there is a danger, in view of the recent case of Petrotim Securities v. Ayres (41 A.T.C. 388) that the Inland Revenue will contend that the relevant transactions are not trading transactions at all, and will attempt to substitute the market value of the goods in the accounts of the transferor company (but not necessarily in the transferee company). It is thought, however, that the Inland Revenue will only attempt this where another motive lies behind the transaction – e.g. the utilization of losses incurred in previous years or the reduction of profits in the opening years of assessment. These problems will be avoided if manufacturing and selling is carried out by the same company.

17. A group with a multitude of companies is liable to become involved in complications regarding subvention payments and profits tax grouping, apart from numerous other administrative difficulties, and time and expense is incurred in agreeing many taxation computations with the Inland Revenue. Furthermore, the formation of each new company results in the profits of one of the early years of trading being assessed to income tax more than once, and on the cessation of trading there may be unutilized losses the benefit of which is lost.

18. If, when the new corporation tax is enacted, companies are required to account to the Revenue for the tax deducted from dividends paid, then it could be disadvantageous for a subsidiary to declare a dividend to its parent company as a higher overall rate of tax would be payable. The answer to this could be to retain as few companies as possible to manage the group's activities.

Advantages of Separate Companies

19. On the other hand, the formation of a separate company or companies would be advantageous in the following circumstances.

20. If products are let out on rental as well as being sold, then in order that the 'capital' expenditure on the 'hired out' products may be eligible for investment allowances and to avoid the danger of its being regarded merely as further stock-in-trade, it is advisable for a separate company to handle all rental transactions. The activities of this company should consist solely of renting products; it should be expressly forbidden by its memorandum and articles of association to sell any products to customers or grant them options to purchase. When the assets are no longer required for rental, they should either be scrapped or sold to the operating company.

21. If a company's trade, or part of it, is that of an agent, it may be advisable for separate companies to run each agency so that a sum received as compensation for the loss of an agency might be regarded as a capital receipt. If all the agencies were run by one company, compensation received for the loss of one agency would almost certainly be regarded as income. Similar remarks might also apply to the sale of 'know-how'.

22. If the profits of a company are below £12,000 per annum, they are abated for profits tax purposes. It is submitted, however, that this fact alone is not sufficient to justify the formation or retention of a large number of small companies.

23. Assuming none of the above circumstances applied and other commercial considerations permitting, consideration could be given to a group reorganization involving the amalgamation of the corresponding manufacturing and selling companies, after purchasing the interests of any minority shareholders. This would be carried out under the provisions of section 17, Finance Act, 1954, whereby income tax is assessed on a continuing basis and any unutilized income tax losses and capital allowances are carried into the transferee companies. This does not apply to profits tax losses, however, so that where these are material the reorganization might have to be delayed until they had been utilized (but see paragraph 25). No stamp duty would be payable on the transfer of assets after which, if necessary, the transferor companies could be liquidated. If these companies have substantial post-acquisition revenue reserves, however, it might be advisable to keep these dormant companies in being so that should circumstances require they may declare revenue dividends to be used as outlined in paragraph 46.

24. Consideration could then be given as to whether to carry the reorganization a stage further by merging the new operating companies. If this were done, the group then comprising (say) a holding company and an operating subsidiary, the former manufacturing companies could be reclassified as 'manufacturing divisions'.

25. With regard to the transfer of the trade of a company having unutilized profits tax losses, it might be mentioned here that it is often possible to arrange for this company to take over the trade of another company and so retain the benefit of these losses. Furthermore, as all trades are treated as one for profits tax purposes (section 43, Finance Act, 1947), this could well result in the profits tax losses being utilized at a much earlier date.

Capital Expenditure

26. The tax planner, whether he is the firm's taxation accountant or the professional accountant, should point out to management the tax savings and deferment of taxation liabilities available where capital expenditure is concerned. In particular he should, if possible, circularize the factory managers and accountants and/or call periodical meetings at which the various means of minimizing and deferring tax liabilities should be discussed. The following are some examples:

(a) Immediately plant is put permanently out of use it should be written off in the accounts and a balancing allowance obtained as soon as possible. This results in interest saving as taxation liabilities are reduced at the earliest opportunity. 'Dead' assets should not be accumulated in the accounts.

(b) If a choice exists as to which particular plant or machinery is to be disposed of, all equally efficient, it should be noted that disposing of the most recently acquired plant may well result in the largest balancing allowance.

(c) Expenditure should be allocated, if possible, to plant rather than to buildings so that a higher capital allowance rate is obtained, as well as double the rate of investment allowance. Expenditure on 'plant' includes, for taxation purposes, costs of altering buildings incidental to the installation of plant (section 300, Income Tax Act, 1952), lifts, electrical and heating installations, special housing around machinery or special reinforced flooring for machinery, and moveable partitioning in cases where the nature of the trade is such that the mobility of partitions is required (Jarrold v. John Good & Sons Ltd (41 A.T.C. 335)).

(d) Investment allowances are normally available on items capable of a life of at least two years, such as tools, certain protective clothing, racks, shelving, beer barrels, returnable containers, jigs, dies, moulds and stillages (see Hinton v. Maden & Ireland (38 A.T.C. 231; 38 T.C. 411)). Even though the Inland Revenue usually insist in such cases that a stock of these items be brought in for taxation purposes, if not already forming part of the accounts stock, the claiming of investment allowances still results in an overall saving.

(e) Higher capital allowance rates for shift working are available (section 285, Income Tax Act, 1952).

(f) If plant is to be transferred or sold abroad, any investment allowance given is withdrawn if the sale takes place within three years of purchase. (Paragraph 2 (a), Part I, Second Schedule, Finance Act, 1954.) The formation of a plant hiring company can sometimes prove advantageous in this connection.

(g) When new offices and factory buildings are being planned, it is important to bear in mind that industrial buildings allowances are available on offices if the cost thereof is not more than 10 per cent of the total (section 271 (4), Income Tax Act, 1952). Expenditure on a separate office block is not eligible for industrial buildings allowances, although if offices are built on to an existing industrial building as an extension, industrial buildings allowances could be obtained on the expenditure on the offices if not exceeding 10 per cent of the total expenditure. However, if further offices are added later to the same building with the result that the total cost of all the offices now exceeds 10 per cent of the total cost of the building, no industrial buildings allowances whatsoever will be available either on the original or the new offices. Expenditure on certain types of offices can rank as industrial buildings expenditure. These offices must be directly connected with the running of the works, and include drawing offices (C.I.R. v. Lambhill Ironworks (29 A.T.C. 240; 31 T.C. 393)), and, in most cases, offices used for production planning and production control. Internal roads and works car parks also rank as industrial buildings expenditure.

(h) It is sometimes possible to obtain the Inland Revenue's agreement to writing off to revenue items of capital expenditure costing less than, say, £50 and not adding these back for taxation purposes. This simplifies accounting procedures and avoids many balancing allowance and charge computations. The Inland Revenue may also be prepared to allow investment allowances on such items.

(i) As to whether it is beneficial to rent or buy equipment, this depends on various factors, but generally it will be advantageous to buy, due to the availability of an investment allowance of 30 per cent.

27. Very few companies now adopt a 'renewals' basis for capital expenditure as compared with a 'wear and tear' basis, as little allowance is obtained in respect of additions and improvements. For companies still adopting a 'renewals' basis, a change to a 'wear and tear' basis would normally prove advantageous, especially if the change took place in the year immediately following that in which there were substantial replacements of assets, as a deduction for the costs of replacement would be obtained in one year and capital allowances would commence on the high notional written-down value of the same assets in the following year.

28. Considerable tax saving can, therefore, be obtained by keeping capital expenditure under constant review, and any new capital expenditure programmes should be considered at all stages by the tax planner.

Stock and Work in Progress

29. The particular method of stock valuation adopted by the group is not primarily a taxation matter. However, if all the group companies do not adopt the same basis, a change made to conform to a group basis could result in a considerable tax saving.
